Dr. Jean Charcot, Noted French Scientist, and Aids Are Drowned

Only One Survives Hurricane's Fury

By the Associated Press.

Reykjavik, Iceland, Sept. 16 (AP).—Capt. Jean Charcot, known as the "Admiral Byrd of France," drowned today, together with all except one of the crew of 60 aboard the exploration ship Pourquois-Pas, which foundered in a gale off Iceland.

The lone survivor reported was Petty Officer Eugene Geonidec, who swam ashore through heavy surf and stumbled, exhausted, into the home of a fisherman.

Geonidec gasped out that the vessel grounded on rocks and was pounded to pieces by heavy seas so quickly those on board had virtually no chance to escape.

He said he was certain none of the 60 members of the crew except himself had survived.

The bodies of 30 men, including that of Dr. Charcot, were washed up tonight on the bleak Icelandic coast.

The Spanish gunboat Aegir, which first reported the disaster, searched the seas about the sunken vessel's protruding spars, but found no other survivors.

The vessel struck so quickly no distress signals were displayed before she went to the bottom.

Dr. Charcot, 69, had an international reputation as an explorer. The region on the edge of the Antarctic near Grahamland was named for him and is known as Charcotland.

Led Two Expeditions.

He led two expeditions to the South Polar areas—in 1905-1908 and in 1908-1910—and held decorations from both the French and British governments.

The last expedition to the South Polar areas was made in the Pourquoi-Pas which was built especially for the explorer in 1908.

A wooden steamer of 440 tons, she was stoutly built to resist the ice pressure and was considered a sound vessel for hazardous voyages.

She was 140 feet long with a 31-foot beam.

Geonidec told a story of heroic but unsuccessful efforts by the crew to prevent the craft from foundering.

The Pourquoi-Pas, he said, left Cape Reykjanes at 1 p. m. yesterday, seeking shelter from the impending hurricane, but grounded at Skerry at 5 a. m. today.

The craft immediately began leaking badly, her engines stopped functioning and it was evident she could not be refloated, he related.

Attempts to launch lifeboats in the mountainous waves, Geonidec said, were unavailing, as the boats were swept to sea before they could be lowered.

All lifebelts also were carried overboard, he said, and the scientists and members of the crew had no alternative but to try to swim to safety. His own escape he considered miraculous.

The expedition sponsored by the Paris Trocadero Museum of Ethnography, sailed from Copenhagen April 25 and reached Christian-Shaab, on the west coast of Greenland, in the middle of May.

Cut Off From the World.

Crossing the great ice cap mountain ranges at an altitude sometimes of 10,000 feet, the explorers were entirely cut off from communication with the world for seven weeks.

Nothing was heard from them until their recent arrival at Angmagssalik, the principal settlement on the east coast of Greenland.

Scientists aboard with Charcot included Maurice Paraf, naturalist; J. Devaux, physicist; M. Jacquiert, naturalist; P. Berronde, geographer, and M. Baduel, photographer.

The Pourquoi-Pas, built for Capt. Charcot at St. Malo, France, was

Welfare Group To Seek 'Basis' In Firms' Gifts

Human Needs Rally Today to Plan 'Yardstick' for Corporations' Share.

The problem of setting up a "yardstick" method of determining how much a corporation can contribute to the annual Community Chest drives in the Nation will be considered at the annual mobilization for human needs today.

From three to four hundred leading manufacturers, railroad presidents, capitalists, public utility executives, insurance company officials and social welfare workers have assembled for the session, which will begin with an address by President Roosevelt at 10 a. m. today from the south portico of the White House.

The President began work on the speech late yesterday, dictating to a stenographer after a long list of callers had been checked off.

The group, adjourning to the Mayflower Hotel for a series of conferences after the President's speech, will attempt to set standards by which the financial responsibility of each corporation can be decided.

Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Co., heads the conference. Donaldson Brown, chairman of the finance committee of General Motors Corporation; M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Wendell Willkie, president of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation, will be among the speakers.

According to statistics, the depression gave impetus to the welfare contributions from large national corporations, especially in branch localities, but no plan ever has been outlined by which the relative responsibility of a corporation could be determined.

Instead of relying on the individual generosity of corporation officials and boards, the mobilization chiefs will concentrate on a solution of the ratio problem of contribution according to responsibility.

Under the tax laws, corporations may deduct 5 per cent of their net income from their taxable income for contributions to charities. With this in mind, the leaders today will try to work out a basis for corporate giving.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War under President Wilson; Charles P. Taft, member of the Republican strategy committee for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, and Miss Dorothy Thompson, columnist, economist and wife of Sinclair Lewis, also will addres the sessions.

Rickenbacker Boat Missing in Storm

Musgrave Harbor, Newfoundland, Sept. 16 (AP).—Stormy weather and a heavy sea lashed Musgrave Harbor tonight, creating fear for the safety of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and his crew of five, who left Carbonear, 100 miles south of here, last midnight to bring aid to Harry Richman nad Dick Merrill.

The New York rescue party, due here in the motor vessel Lincoln at 4 p. m., Newfoundland time, was unreported late tonight, and it was not known whether they had attempted to fight through the storm or had put into some harbor until tomorrow.

The six men flew up from New York to Harbor Grace with extra gasoline, propeller blades and a spare battery for the luckless Lady Peace, the Richman-Merrill transatlantic monoplane which bogged down in a swamp after crossing the Atlantic for the second time.

Citizens Arm, Rout Pickets In California

10 Injured as Workers Fight Police, Seek to Halt Shipping.

By the Associated Press.

Salinas, Calif., Sept. 16.—Scores of special deputy sheriffs, chosen from all the town's able-bodied citizens, armed themselves with wagon spokes and guns late today and began a drive to rid the city of all pickets in a 12-day-old lettuce workers strike.

The deputizations by Sheriff Carl Abbott came after a day of disorders which saw ten persons, one a woman, injured in a hand-to-hand clash between strike pickets and officers, called in to protect shipments of lettuce moving from the fields to packing plants.

Wearing blue arm bands for identification, the deputies went through all the streets and alleys.

They used wagon-spoke clubs to belabor the jeering pickets and formed a flying wedge to drive between 400 and 500 persons from the downtown district.

About 250 citizens, many carrying firearms, swarmed to where the pickets had congregated on Monterey street.

Police accompanied the deputies, hurling tear-gas bombs into the strikers' ranks.

Tonight the State Federation of Labor convention at Sacramento labeled Salinas lettuce "hot cargo" and urged union labor throughout the Nation not to handle it.

The convention voted also to march around the State capitol at noon tomorrow as a protest against Gov. Merriam's attitude toward the strike.

Trucks Roar Into Sheds.

State highway patrol cars meanwhile convoyed lettuce trucks through the city. The crowd scattered as the trucks roared into the barricaded sheds.

Automobiles with loudspeakers cruised the streets, speakers urging the crowds "in the name of the State of California, disperse." Cat-calls answered the pleas.

Abbott's call earlier in the day for a mobilization of all able-bodied citizens came after Gov. Frank F. Merriam announced in Sacramento he had evidence that the strike was led by Communists and that he would use every means at his command to preserve order.

The number hurt by flying gas shells in the day's fighting was undetermined because they were not hospitalized, but were treated on the spot by their companions.

Gas clouds penetrated the business district and business houses closed for a time.

Race to Save Crop.

Sixty-five or more State highway patrolmen already were at the scene, reinforcing local authorities and lettuce growers and shippers racing against time to pack out the last of their perishable $2,000,000 crop.

The hand-to-hand battle broke out after strike sympathizers cut the ropes on a truck load of lettuce and spilled the crates in the street.

Officers swarmed to the scene, swinging clubs.

Henry Strobel, president of the Associated Farmers, an antiradical organization, was badly gashed in the face by a flying bottle. Deputy Harry Bondesen was taken to a hospital with a cut on the head. Tom Bunn, jr., a lettuce grower-shipper, was among the injured.

Advance on Sheds.

Preceding the clash officers fired gas shells into a crowd advancing on an area through which trucks were passing into a barricaded packing shed from the lettuce fields.

The labor dispute grew out of a demand by the Fruit and Vegetable Workers' Union that its members be given preference in employment. Growers and shippers rejected the demand and 3,200 union men quit work.

Shippers recruited other help and resumed work yesterday under guards and barricades.

Troubles in Past.

Labor troubles in the great agricultural area of the Imperial Valley of California have been common for the last several years. At times their violence has grown to such an extent land owners have revived the historic order of the 250-Lb. Fishwife, Mother of 3, Trains for Grand Opera Career

By the Associated Press.

Stroudsburg, Pa., Sept. 16.—John Witte may have to get another buyer for his fish and produce market. His wife, Mary, who took care of all that, is going to try for grand opera.

Her "discoverer"—Giacomo Bourg, of New York—says she's a sure bet, a "natural genius," and possessor of "the greatest dramatic soprano voice in the country today." She's the "real Isolde" type, he exclaimed, and with some training—probably two and a half years—to round out the high notes, she'll be ready. His finding her, said Bourg, was pure accident.

Mrs. Witte laughingly admits to 250 pounds aveirdupois.

Her age?

"Oh, leave that out," she laughed again.

Anyhow, she's been married 19 years, has a 17-year-old son and two younger daughters.

Three or four times a week she goes in her husband's truck to Philadelphia's Dock street, 90 miles from this Pocono Mountain town. She's been doing that for six years.

"We have a produce and seafood market," she said, "and I do all the buying. They all know me on Dock street. You'll see me there."

Mrs. Witte has never done any concert work, she said.

"I've sung for churches and clubs, of course, in our little town," she added.

She has done some voice training in Stroudsburg and she's studying "Aida" now.

The "discovery" occurred about six weeks ago, she related. About October 1 she will go to New York to study daily under Bourg.

Her husband?

"Oh, he's very much enthused," she said. "He thinks it's grand."

Pursued by Brother

SARAH CHURCHILL.

Brother Races Miss Churchill Over Atlantic

Statesman's Daughter on Way to Keep 'Date' With N. Y. Band Leader.

By the Associated Press.

London, Sept. 16—The course of true love for Sarah Churchill, daughter of Winston Churchill, ran across the Atlantic Ocean tonight—but whether the love was for a musical chorus or for Vic Oliver, orchestra leader, was something Miss Churchill hasn't told.

Miss Churchill, 21, was aboard the Bremen bound for New York. She could not be prevailed upon to say whether her interest in coming to New York lay in her heart or her dancing feet.

In New York, Oliver insisted his interest in Miss Churchill was professional. She is a good dancer, he said, and he is giving her a chance to come to America and make a name for herself in his new musical show.

Ah yes, Oliver said, he remembered having met Miss Churchill in London when he and she were in the same show. But Oliver also remembered plainly, Miss Churchill was in the chorus line while he, Oliver, was a principal.

Marriage? Oliver's eyebrows lifted with his outstretched palms.

In London all was mystery concerning the junketing Churchills. The Evening News said Miss Churchill was sailing into the waiting arms of Oliver. He even paid her passage, the newspaper said.

The other members of the family of the British stateman kept silent. So did brother Randolph on the Queen Mary.

In New York Oliver had an idea. Miss Churchill, he remembered, had written him asking for a chance in his show. She could dance, all right, so he cabled her to come on over.

And what, asked Oliver, do you think she replied?

"Accept your engagement."

Oliver wondered if the fine hand of a press agent or romanticist might not have misinterpreted Miss Churchill's "engagement."

Anyway, said Oliver, the show must go on.

Atlantic Shipping Flees as Hurricane Heads for Florida

Jacksonville, Fla., Sept. 16 (AP).—A tropical hurricane, the most violent in southern waters since the devastating Labor Day storm of 1935, was located about 750 miles east of Jacksonville tonight by the Federal Hurricane Warning System.

Atlantic shipping was hurrying out of the storm zone as the hurricane, battering high seas over a 500-mile area, moved west-northwestward at 8 to 10 miles per hour.

Although apparently out of the direct path of the storm, British resort cities on the Bermuda Islands were feeling the fringes of the destructive winds.

A 3:30 p. m. advisory issued by the Federal Hurricane Warning System said:

"Tropical disturbance of great extent and hurricane intensity central 1 p. m., about 750 miles east of Jacksonville.

"Moving west-northwestward 8 to 10 miles per hour attended by gales and squalls over area 500 miles in diameter and winds of hurricane force over considerable area around center. Caution advised vessels in path of severe storm."

Drive Is Sped By Roosevelt; 2 Talks Added

Observers Say Michigan and Maine Outcome Is Factor in Plans.

By Sidney Olson.

President Roosevelt last night made a sudden shift in his campaign plans, adding two speeches and an appearance to his crowded schedule for the month-end.

The speed-up in the Democratic strategy, linked by observers to the primary results in Maine and Michigan, appeared to indicate the President, disturbed at the seeming Administration reversals, was prepared to begin intensive campaigning sooner than he previously had thought necessary.

The President leaves tomorrow night for Cambridge, Mass., where he will speak at Harvard tercentenary exercises. Then he will proceed to Hyde Park, N. Y., for a brief rest period, to be followed by a speech at the New York State Democratic convention in Syracuse on September 29.

On September 30 he will return to Washington. He will leave late that night and go to Elkins, W. Va., arriving there at noon, October 1, for the Mountain State Forest Festival, where he may make an address.

Topic Not Revealed.

From there he will go to Pittsburgh, arriving at about 8 p. m. and making an address the same night. The nature of the address and its auspices were not explained at the White House.

On the next day Mr. Roosevelt will dedicate a new medical center at Jersey City, N. J., moving on to New York City the same day to see a World Series baseball game. He then will proceed to his Hyde Park home for an indefinite stay.

Previously his trip plans terminated with the Syracuse speech. The extension of his campaign appearances to West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey indicated to political students that the President was going to concentrate more and more on a vigorous and persistent campaign.

Observers also recalled that in the summer of 1932 President Hoover planned to make only a couple of political addresses, but abandoned this program after the Maine election and disquieting reports came in various primaries. He then launched an intensive campaign with frequent speaking trips.

Pennsylvania is a particular battle-ground this year, with tremendous Democratic registration offsetting the traditional Republican strength, and thus the President's drive into the disputed territory will be watched with especial attention by both camps.

At the time of his return after his drought trip, reporters noted that the President had spent less than two weeks in Washington since the adjournment of Congress. His latest stop here has been particularly notable for the extensive visitors' list posted daily, as he has made a quick check-up of the activities of the various agencies. In some quarters it was held yesterday that from now on the President would spend even less time in Washington until the election returns come in on November 3.

On Monday the President told his press conference he didn't want to be four days away from his Washington base, because of the grave international situation, and that this might postpone his hoped-for California trip, or even cause its abandonment. If the European problem continues to be serious, informed sources yesterday held it likely the President would intensify his campaign in the East, in regions now considered doubtful by the Democratic strategy board.

Many reporters yesterday took the view that whether or not his previous speeches and appearances have been "political," the new speaking schedule drops all non-political pretension. At Hyde Park, after October 2, the President will plan his October campaign traveling, it is believed.

Tons of TNT Planted Under Alcazar's 1,700; Rebels Advance to Aid

Ship Squadron Created by U. S. To Patrol Atlantic Off Spain

Rear Admiral Fairfield Will Take Command of Four Vessels.

The Navy Department yesterday ordered a flagship—the U. S. S. Raleigh, under the command of Rear Admiral Arthur P. Fairfield—to proceed to European waters to take command of the American warships there.

The move established a temporary European squadron of American battleships for the first time in seven years.

Both the State and Navy Departments emphasized that the shift was merely one of organization, but in some quarters it was held that the move was in definite recognition of the dangerously tangled European situation.

Establishment of the squadron came on the heels of denials by both President Roosevelt and Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson that such a squadron would be organized.

Being Overhauled.

The Raleigh, a light cruiser now being overhauled at the Norfolk Navy Yard, has been ordered to sail for Gibraltar upon completion of repairs, with Admiral Fairfield's pennant to be hoisted next Friday.

The temporary squadron will come into being upon the arrival of the Raleigh. The destroyers Kane and Hatfield, and the Coast Guard cutter Cayuga, all of which have been engaged in rescue work along the Spanish coast, will make up the squadron.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull said at a press conference yesterday that the Spanish situation was the only factor involved. He added that this Government had not as yet considered a permanent policy with regard to a European squadron.

The Navy Department said the addition of the flagship and Admiral Fairfield would merely give a name to what actually had been a temporary squadron, operating under the command of Capt. William F. Amsden, the commander of the U. S. S. Quincy, the heavy

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 16—Government plans to blow up the shell-battered Alcazar and its 1,700 rebel occupants virtually are complete, a reliable authority disclosed tonight.

Loyalist sources said the "terrible decision" to blow up the crumbling fortress atop Toledo had been taken after ten days of futile efforts to induce the rebel commander, Jose Moscardo, to release women and children in the building under pledges to safe conduct from both the government and diplomatic corps.

High explosive charges, each containing more than a ton of TNT, have now been set in place.

Electric cables connect with the charges along two underground mines leading beneath the Alcazar, each 100 yards long.

A troop train of regular army soldiers was sent from Madrid to reinforce Toledo's militia garrison. These troops will storm the sides of the fortress as soon as the explosive has done its work.

Houses Evacuated.

Over a two-mile area on the west and south sides of the Alcazar, all houses have been evacuated.

Government artillery batteries northeast of the town which have shelled the Alcazar constantly for two months were standing by, ready to pour more shells into the ruins if the subterranean passages of the fortress are not destroyed by the blasts.

Bus loads of hand grenades and ammunition for rifles, machine guns and pistols have been moved into the city during the last few days for the final clean-up.

No quarter will be given the male defenders of the turreted fortress, once the home of Moorish and Castilian kings. But orders have been given to respect the lives of any women or children who manage to live through the explosions.

Rebels Move Up in South.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Lisbon, Portugal, Sept. 16.—Sworn to lift the siege of the Alcazar castle in Toledo, Spanish rebel troops today smashed their way relentlessly through demoralized loyalist lines.

After northern and southern armies united, the rebels reached Torrijos, 20 miles from Toledo, and Escalona, 53 miles southwest of Madrid.

Talavera de la Reina dispatches to the Lisbon newspaper O Seculo reported the Spanish Foreign Legion, bearing the brunt of the major offensive of the civil war, killed 1,000 loyalists in one day.

Simultaneously with bitter fighting for Toledo, where 1,700 rebels, including 500 women and children, have withstood a fierce attack for nine weeks, insurgent armies moved out of San Sebastian and battled their way 16 miles westward, directly threatening the major seaport of Bilbao.

Ferocious Moorish warriors left San Sebastian and captured Orio, Aguinago and Esteban, loyalist keypoints for the defense of Bilboa.

While rebels, directed from field headquarters at Talavera de la Reina pushed on to Toledo, insurrectionists on the northern front started an offensive against Cuenca, southeast of Madrid. The pincer movement southwest and southeast of the capital threatened Madrid's communications with Valencia and Alicante, the ports on which the loyalists depend for vital supplies.

Dispatches from loyalists on all fronts showed the government high command was concerned over the threat that Madrid may be isolated and that loyal forces on the Tolado front may be cut off.

On the Bay of Biscay coast the rebels, after pushing back the loyalist lines west of San Sebastian, proceeded to blockade Bilbao and Santander. Foreign shipping was warned to navigate at its own risk.

Half a million civilians and 60,000 troops were confined in the blockaded region. Their situation

Coughlin Aid, Brown in Tight Michigan Race

Two Losers in Democrats' Massachusetts Primary to Run in Fall.

Shifting vote totals and numerous close races in some of the less outstanding contests maintained interest yesterday in the outcome of primary elections in five States on Tuesday.

With Senator James Couzens defeated for the Republican Senatorial nomination in Michigan, 313,280 votes to 190,411 in 3,309 out of 3,467 precincts, a close race developed for the Democratic Senatorial nomination. Representative Prentiss M. Brown was leading Louis B. Ward, Washington representative of Father Charles E. Coughlin's Union for Social Justice, by the narrow count of 119,896 to 114,793 in 3,342 precincts. These figures were among those reported by the Associated Press in its summaries of the primaries.

Frank Murphy, on leave as Commissioner to the Philippines, won the Democratic governorship race from George W. Welsh, with the vote standing: Murphy, 240,927; Welsh, 115,935 in 3,185 polling places. Gov. Frank Fitzgerald was renominated on the Republican ticket over Roscoe E. Fitch, 432,215 votes to 52,665 in 3,302 precincts.

Republican ballots in Michigan predominated over Democratic ones by a ratio of 5 to 3, but Democrats contended, the claim being at once disputed, that many of the Couzens voters would go Democratic in November.

In Massachusetts, Gov. James M. Curley, Democrat, and Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., were chosen to oppose each other for the Senate seat be-

Labor to Study A.F.G.E. Ouster Of 600 Clerks

By Samuel Lubell.
A Staff Correspondent.

Detroit, Sept. 16.—Expulsion of from 600 to 800 members of five New Deal lodges of the American Federation of Government Employes, whose temporary certificates were revoked yesterday on "red" charges, will be investigated by the American Federation of Labor.

Announcement of "a thorough investigation of the practicability of bringing about the reaffiliation or reorganization and organization of new lodges" in the units was made at the closing session of the Government employes' fifth annual convention shortly before adjournment. The investigation is to be conducted by one representative of the A. F. of L. and one from the A. F. G. E.

Actually, it was learned, the investigation will be conducted almost entirely by the A. F. of L. representative, whose "recommendations will hardly be disregarded by the A. F. G. E."

An effort to have the convention recommend that the A. F. of L. do its best to heal the breach with John L. Lewis' committee on industrial organization was voted down after George Googe, A. F. of L. "trouble shooter," took the floor to defend the suspension of the C. I. O. unions."

Other Highlights.

Other highlights of tonight's session were:

Expulsion of Justice Lodge, No. 21.

Approval of an 11-point legislative program.

Passage of a resolution asking that civil service be extended to District Government employes.

Included in the 11-point legislative program were the following proposals:

A minimum $1,000 annual wage with statutory automatic increases in pay; a 5-day, 35-hour week with no pay decrease; civil service for all branches of civil government; extension of classification to the field; 30-year optional retirement; night differentials for all night-shift jobs; payment of not less than the prevailing wage to draft employes in agencies not affected by wage boards; repeal of the marriage clause of section 213 of the economy act, and increased opportunity for promotion and creation of a board of appeals.

The convention also adopted resolutions making for an amendment to the retirement law to include hospitalization for all disabled civil service employes, for efficiency ratings accessible to all employes, and creation of a transfer service in the Civil Service Commission.

At the morning session, field liberals and District progressives, defeated in the presidential elections and in their fight on the expulsion of the temporary certificate lodges, staged a bitter but futile fight to prevent the convention

N. Y. Politician, Woman Held In Alleged Blackmail Plot Here

A Republican candidate for Congress from Queens County, New York, and a former Oklahoma school teacher were held for the grand jury yesterday on charges of conspiracy to commit blackmail.

Arraigned in Police Court, Samuel Leighton Frooks, 52, of Jackson Heights, N. Y., and Mrs. Mary Krieger, 35, of the Kennedy-Warren Apartments, each pleaded not guilty and waived preliminary hearing; Mrs. Krieger was remanded to jail in default of $5,000 bond, while Frooks, an attorney, posted bail of $2,500.

Both were arrested early yesterday in a Pennsylvania avenue hotel. Carroll Pierce, president of the Citizens National Bank, of Alexandria, Va., was the complainant.

The arrests followed a meeting held between the principals in the Washington Hotel, at which Pierce was said to have been present. At this time investigators used dictaphones to record the conversation. Police last night denied a report that there had been any "tapping" of telephone wires in the case.

When the case was called before Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt, Roger Robb, assistant United States attorney, asked for a continuance until next week. He explained Pierce was ill and would not be able to appear immediately, as urged by Frooks, who appealed for a hearing today.

Frooks and Mrs. Krieger appeared in court without counsel. Judge Hitt assigned an attorney who, after conferring with the defendants, waived preliminary hearing and asked that bond be reduced.

The couple were taken into custody by Detective Sergt. Earl Hartman and Detectives Dorritt Green and Paul Little.

According to Robb, the alleged blackmail plot hinged on the claim that Pierce had failed to live up to a promise to give Mrs. Krieger a job in his bank.

Frooks told reporters yesterday he had been retained by Mrs. Krieger to represent her in a suit claiming breach of contract of employment. Frooks said Mrs. Krieger contended she was hired by Pierce as a "contact woman" for the bank to solicit new accounts.

The New York attorney continued he was attempting to get $1,250 allegedly owed Mrs. Krieger by Pierce for back salary. An amicable settlement was reached Tuesday night, Frooks stated, but when he

Ballot Recount In Maine Asked By Democrats

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 16.—Declaring they had evidence indicating violation of Federal election laws in the Maine election Monday, Democratic leaders today announced they would demand a recount in the State's close Senatorial race.

The charges were made by Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial committee, after a conference with Gov. Louis J. Brann, of Maine, defeated candidate for the Senate, and Democratic Chairman James A. Farley.

Guffey said that "if the evidence justifies it" there also would be a contest when Senator Wallace H. White, jr., Brann's Republican opponent, attempts to take his seat in the Senate in January.

Charges Held "Ridiculous."

Immediately after Guffey issued his statement, Representative Josepn W. Martin, jr., manager of the Republican campaign in the East, said the charges were "ridiculous" and were 'merely politics."

"After hearing the reports of a number of people from Maine," Guffey said, "I am convinced that there is at least a prima facie case of violation of the Federal election laws.

"I do not feel that it would be proper at this time to disclose the evidence that indicates that Gov. Louis Brann was elected U. S. Senator from Maine, and that he was deprived of the office to which he was elected."

He said no direct charges of "corruption" would be made until the story of the "other side" had been heard.

Farley declined to elaborate on Guffey's statement, saying "it speaks for itself."

"Favorable to Roosevelt."

Brann, who was defeated by 5,031 votes, attended Farley's morning conference, but would not discuss the basis for the recount move.

Commenting on the election, he said:

"If they can only defeat me by less than 5,000, in the most vigorous effort made to defeat any candidate, I certainly believe that the result should be considered favorable to President Roosevelt."

Referring to the large contribution made to the State Republican committee by several wealthy families, Brann said that "if they had given me the money spent by the Republican State committee I could have elected a Chinaman Governor of Maine."

Offers Services.

Brann offered his services to the Democratic National Committee, and Farley said the Governor would speak in his own State and other parts of the country.

Of Senator Guffey's charges, Martin said "it simply shows what a bad state of mind they're in after the Maine election."

"It shows the New Dealers have been having their own way so long they can't take it," he continued. "Maine is just the beginning and they might as well get used to these jolts."

ing vacated by Marcus A. Coolidge. However, both candidates defeated by Curley will run as independents in the general election. They are Mayor Robert E. Greenwood, of Fitchburg, son-in-law of Senator Coolidge, and Thomas C. O'Brien, Vice Presidential candidate of the Union Party

Former Senator George H. Moses was defeated by Gov. H. Styles Bridges for the Republican Senatorial nomination in New Hampshire, and returns yesterday showed Maj. Francis P. Murphy, Nashau shoe manufacturer, was nominated for the governership over Elliot A. Carter. Murphy will be opposed by Amos Blandin, Democrat, speaker of the State House of Representatives, and Bridges by Representative William Rogers, Democrat.

The vote count in Wisconsin showed that the Republican Party had made substantial gains, as had Gov. Philip LaFollette's Progressive Party, while the Democratic vote on the governorship was 75,000 below the total of two years ago.

Alexander Wylie led John B. Chapple, 84,037 to 77,669 on a virtually complete count, for the position of Republican opponent for LaFollette, and Arthur W. Lueck won the Democratic race from William D. Carroll, 84,794 to 58,355. The Republicans polled 12,868 votes more than in 1934.

Results in the Congressional races generally in the five States were unfavorable to Townsend and Coughlin-indorsed candidates.

In Michigan, Verner W. Main, the first Townsendite House member elected, last December, in a straight fight on the old age pension issue, was defeated Tuesday for the Republican House nomination by Paul W. Shafer. Main, however, had waived Townsend support in this election. In the same district, Rosslyn L. Sowers, Democrat, was the only Townsend-indorsed candidate to win in Michigan. He will oppose Shafer in November.

Six of the 18 Coughlin Congressional indorsees in Michigan apparently were victorious: Representative George G. Sadowski, Democrat, in the First (Detroit); Charles E. Downing, Democrat, in the Second; Rosslyn W. Sowers, Democrat, in the Third; Representative Jesse P. Wolcott, Republican, in the Seventh; John J. Leucke, Democrat, in the Eleventh and Representative Frank E. Hook, Democrat, in the Twelfth.

The nominees in the various districts:

First—Charles A. Roxborough, colored (R), Representative Sadowski (D).

Fifth—Representative Carl E. Mapes (R), Thomas F. McAllister (D).

Seventh—Representative Jesse P. Wolcott (R), Albert A. Wagner (D).

Ninth—Representative Albert J. Engel (R), Jack Eliasohn (D). (Leading.)

Twelfth—Former Representative W. Frank James (R), Representative Frank E. Hook (D).

Thirteenth—Representative Clarence J. McLeod (R), George D. O'Brien (D).

Fifteenth—Nathaniel H. Goldstick (R), Representative John D. Dingell (D).

Wisconsin's Congressmen, seven Progressives and three Democrats, were renominated. Representatives Hull, Withrow and Gehrmann, Progressives, were indorsed by the Townsend old-age group. Five other Townsend candidates apparently were defeated.

Polling more votes than the combined totals of his four opponents, Representative Charles W. Tobey (Republican), New Hampshire, was renominated, while Arthur B. Jenks won the Republican nomination in the other Congressional District over Secretary of State Enoch D. Fuller and Mayor Charles E. Carroll of Laconia.

Daniel J. Hagerty, unopposed Democratic nominee, will contest Tobey for the seat. John J. Sheehan, who defeated six opponents, will oppose Jenks. Sheehan won the Democratic nomination by only 118 votes over Alphonse Roy.

All Massachusetts incumbents in the national House who sought renomination were successful, while three candidates for Congressional seats, who ran under the standard of the National Union for Social Justice, won party nominations.

New York's Congressional contests saw only one of 13 Townsend-Coughlin candidates successful. He was Eugene D. Crooker, who ran also as a Republican in the Forty-second District.

A recount was demanded by Emmet J. Larkin, Townsendite, who lost by 242 votes out of 12,372 to John L. Beyer, organization Democrat, in the Fortieth (Erie-Niagara) District. The district is normally heavily Republican.

All incumbents who faced Townsend-Coughlin opposition rode to victory, including Bertrand H. Snell, House Minority Leader; W. Sterling Cole, Francis D. Culkin, Bert Lord, James W. Wadsworth and Walter G. Andrews, all Republicans, and Alfred F. Beiter and James M. Mead, Democrats.

Efforts to Appraise Michigan Primary Figures Bring Headaches to Political Leaders.

By Franklyn Waltman

SELDOM has a primary contest given the politicians such a headache in their efforts to appraise its significance as that held in Michigan this week. If all groups could find something in the Maine result to take pleasure in, none could be sure exactly what the Michigan figures portended.

WALTMAN.

But on the face of almost complete returns and in view of Michigan's solid Republican background, except for 1932, they seemed to bode no good for the New Deal. Perhaps, it was just a coincidence, or perhaps the Michigan result, closely following that in Maine, inspired the President to abandon his humorous pretense that he is not politically campaigning and to announce his first political itinerary to start later this month.

If the Michigan primary figures mean what they seem to mean on the surface, then Mr. Roosevelt has need to become busy politically—and Gov. Alf M. Landon may be cheered by the thought that, despite New Deal propaganda and the use of billions of relief funds, he has a fighting chance to win in November. But it is clear he will have to fight.

* * *

The defeat of Senator James Couzens for renomination by the Republicans was expected—and it is a shame, too, since he brought to the Senate a courage, honesty and sincerity that is badly needed in that body. Irascible though he was on occasion, Senator Couzens had the intellectual honesty to divorce his thinking from his personal considerations. He disregarded his own immense wealth when it came to voting on tax measures and he flew into the face of his party leadership whenever he thought it wrong. He reached the conclusion that "the most important matter confronting the Nation is the re-election of President Roosevelt" and, thinking that, he had the courage to tell it to the people of Michigan three weeks before the primary election, thus torpedoing whatever prospects he had to gain a renomination.

Unfortunately the last thing rewarded in American politics is courage. The game of American politics is played in such a manner that it is impossible for a man, no matter how courageous or how sincere he may be, to indorse the standard bearer of the opposing party and yet retain the support of his own party. Senator Couzens wrote finis to his political career three weeks ago and the primary election this week only confirmed that fact.

* * *

If the defeat of Senator Couzens were the only significant aspect of the Michigan contest, Republican hopes would rest on a slender reed indeed. The really significant things about the Michigan primary are the larger vote cast in the Republican primary than in the Democratic, and the evidence contained in the latter results of dissension within the Democratic Party. This included the remarkable race for the Democratic Senatorial nomination made by Louis B. Ward, Father Charles E. Coughlin's righthand man.

Perhaps one reason why the total of votes cast in the Republican primary substantially exceeded the showing made by the Democrats is that a number of Democrats went into the Republican primary to help Senator Couzens. Under Michigan law, where voters do register party affiliations this is possible.

But with a sharp primary fight within their own party, it would be remarkable if the number of Democrats who participated in the Republican primary were large. But also included in the Couzens vote was a sizable group of independent Republicans who will vote for President Roosevelt. When every allowance is made, it would seem generous to put down one-half of the Couzens votes as potential Roosevelt votes.

Thus if one-half of the Couzens votes are added to the vote polled by former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker—every one of which undoubtedly is a Landon vote—the total, on the basis of incomplete returns, would exceed the vote received by Frank Murphy, President Roosevelt's hand-picked candidate for the Michigan gubernatorial nomination, plus the other one-half of the Couzens vote.

But what about the vote polled by George W. Welsh, Murphy's opponent for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination? Mr. Welsh, in 1932, was a Republican candidate for Governor. His opposition to Mr. Murphy was regarded as a rallying point for those Democrats who resented the action of the President and Democratic Chairman James A. Farley in seeking to hand-pick a gubernatorial candidate for the Democrats. His campaign was marked by attacks on Mr. Farley and the New Deal.

Thus his support on the whole most likely was more anti-Roosevelt than it was pro-Roosevelt. But for the purpose of this comparison, it is sufficient to assert that on the question of Mr. Roosevelt the Welsh voters were evenly balanced and thus cancel out each other when it comes to prognosticating what they will do in November.

* * *

There remains the Democratic senatorial fight where Mr. Ward, with the support of the Coughlinites and Townsendites, supplied the real surprise of the primary election. There four candidates sought the Democratic nomination. Assuming that the votes cast for the other three aspirants are all steadfast Roosevelt votes, certainly those cast for Mr. Ward are not. Some of his supporters may vote for Mr. Roosevelt—but certainly not more than one-half of them. Thus they cancel out and again the Republicans come out on top. Incidentally, Ward and the Welsh votes appeared significantly approximate.

An unknown quantity, however, in all this is the direction which those who did not vote in the primary will take in November. In the 1932 Presidential election more than 1,600,000 votes were cast. When all the figures are completed on the primary vote, it will be at least 600,000 less than the 1932 total.

How will they go in November? Presumably they are more or less independent voters. Apparently they are not sufficiently enthusiastic about the New Deal as to be moved to vote in the primary, either to help Senator Couzens or Mr. Murphy. Consequently they are people who have not yet closed their minds to Gov. Landon. If he makes the right kind of campaign he can get them.

* * *

And let it be remembered that unlike Maine, Michigan started back toward the Republican Party two years ago. In 1932 Mr. Roosevelt carried the State by 131,000 majority; the Democrats elected a Governor by 190,000 and 10 of the State's 17 members of the House. In 1934 the Republicans recaptured the Governorship by a margin of 82,000 votes; they reelected a Senator and they elected 11 out of the 17 members of the House.

New Deal Topic Of Landon Talk With Sen. Holt

Nominee Goes Over Relief Policies With Democratic Critic of WPA.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 16.—Gov. Alf M. Landon discussed New Deal relief policies today with Senator Rush D. Holt, a Democratic critic of WPA, who said afterward he was "favorably impressed" with the Republican Presidential nominee.

"I think WPA is more scandalous than Teapot Dome," the youthful West Virginian added. "I gave the Governor my views very definitely.

"No, I won't make any statement at all on whom I am going to support for the Presidency. I may announce it later and I may not."

Before leaving for Nebraska to continue what he described as a "non-political" tour to find "whether any State has more politics in WPA than West Virginia," Holt said that before taking a public stand on the November election "I want to see whether the Administration is sincere about cleaning up relief."

Landon Rests From Trip.

Landon talked with Holt across the luncheon table during a day devoted almost entirely to his family, rest from his Northeast campaign swing, and plans for a personal vote drive next week into Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois. He did not go to his office.

It was the first time in nearly a month that the Governor had been with Mrs. Landon, Peggy Anne, 4-year-old Nancy Jo and 2-year-old Jack. They returned to Topeka Saturday, the day he spoke in Maine, after a summer at Estes Park, Colo.

Before his conference with Holt, Landon declared "the spirit" of the people he had visited in the Northeast and Middle West "convinces me that these people have decided to repudiate Federal waste, extravagance and incompetence, to eliminate politics from relief and to restore self-government in America."

His Topics Next Week.

A farm program, social security and the reciprocal tariff program were scheduled for discussion during the next week's speaking stops at Des Moines, Ia., Milwaukee and Minneapolis. Going through Illinois, Iowa and Missouri yesterday, Landon touched on agriculture by pledging "a sound program of soil and water conservation" and asking why land "shouldn't have a chance" to produce what it was capable of producing.

Before heading up the Mississippi Valley, the candidate planned to address a national conference of young Republicans here Friday at 2 p. m. (3 p. m. E. S. T.). The talk will be broadcast.

Fred A. Seaton, chairman of the Young Republican Club, of Kansas, which will be host to the gathering, said young Republicans in 48 States had accepted invitations to attend, that each of the 105 Kansas counties would send delegations and that the conference would be held in the city auditorium, which seats about 3,500.

Trip Is Outlined.

Aids sketched this outline of Landon's trip next week:

Leaves Topeka at 8:30 a. m. (9:30 eastern standard time), Tuesday, making rear platform talks en route to Des Moines, where he is due at 4 p. m. The Governor will speak at 8:30 p. m., remaining overnight and the day and night of Wednesday before starting for St. Paul and Minneapolis Thursday morning. More stops will be made along the road. The Minneapolis speech will be at 8:30 p. m. Thursday, and Landon will remain in the twin cities until Saturday morning. He will speak in Milwaukee at 8:30 p. m. Saturday.

At least part of Sunday will be spent at the Oregon (Ill.) home of former Gov. Frank O. Lowden. More platform talks will be made on the run to Topeka Monday.

Bus Drivers Get Tests.

Staunton, Va., Sept. 16.—Prospective bus drivers for the Augusta County School Board were put through stiff examinations yesterday at Verona, between 60 and 75 men reporting. Under direction of State Traffic Sergt. Robert A. Lynn, the men were given written examinations, and then placed at the wheel of one of the school buses to give a demonstration of actual driving ability. Ten failed to pass the test.

The Political Arena

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 16.—Vice President John N. Garner was the guest of honor and speaker tonight at a private dinner arranged by the Democratic National Committee and attended by a hundred bankers, business and professional men and political leaders.

The Vice President arrived here last night from his home at Uvalde, Tex., for an "indefinite" stay. He brought with him a trunk and several bags.

He had a short talk with Democratic Chairman James A. Farley today, but Farley said nothing definite was arranged with regard to the part Garner will take in the campaign.

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—The New Republic, an independent weekly journal, in its current issue which came out today, announced it would support President Roosevelt for re-election.

The journal advises its readers to vote for labor or Socialist candidates in local, State and Congressional elections.

* * * *

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 16 (AP).—Stepping into the heated political issues resulting from Seattle's newspaper strike, Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, tonight urged "every law-abiding citizen" to support Roland H. Hartley, campaigning for Governor on a "law-and-order" stand.

"He will guarantee you a Government that will not submit to coercion from any source," Knox said in an address prepared for delivery here.

* * * *

Crystal Falls, Mich., Sept. 16 (AP).—Election board officials disclosed today that they rejected the absentee voter's ballot mailed here by Emil Hurja, assistant to James A. Farley, Democratic National Chairman, because the ballot had not been witnessed and notarized and was mailed in an unsealed envelope.

Warren Scherer, Iron County Republican chairman, questioned the right of Hurja to vote in Michigan, but this had no part in his ballot being rejected. Scherer contended that Hurja left his home here when he still was a minor and never has lived in the State long enough to qualify.

* * * *

Springfield, Mass., Sept. 16 (AP).—Mrs. Agnes C. Reavey, mother of seven children, who furnished the surprise of yesterday's primaries in western Massachusetts by handily winning the Democratic nomination to Congress in the Second District, was teaching today in Worthington Street Elementary School as if nothing had happened.

Interviewed in her classroom today in the presence of her pupils, Mrs. Reavey said: "It's a little bit early to ask me what I shall do 'when I get to Washington.' I've won the nomination, but there is an election ahead.

"However, I can say that if I am elected, I shall proceed in accordance with the 18 principles of the National Union for Social Justice."

* * * *

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Emil Hurja, assistant to Democratic Chairman James A. Farley, said today in commenting on rejection of his absentee ballot by Crystal Falls, Mich., election officials:

"Undoubtedly a Republican-controlled county organization is responsible for this. I have voted there in five previous elections and it has been my legal residence since I have been living in Washington."

The caravan, in two sections, was escorted out of the city by several private cars, containing Mrs. Lehman, Mrs. William H. Good, national committeewoman; Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of the former Republican Governor, who switched her support to Roosevelt last week; Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, and the wives of other candidates for State offices.

* * * *

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—After a series of conferences with labor leaders in the East and Middle West, Daniel J. Tobin, chairman of the labor division of the Democratic National Committee, said today: "There is every reason to anticipate that more than 90 per cent of the unorganized and organized labor vote will certainly be delivered to President Roosevelt."

* * * *

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Republican National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton came to New York today for a series of conferences tomorrow with party leaders of all the Eastern Seaboard States from Maine to Florida. Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., Eastern division manager, returned to headquarters early in the day from his home in North Attleboro, Mass., where he was renominated in yesterday's primary. Discussing the campaign in Massachusetts he said:

"Roosevelt hasn't a chance to carry the State. Likewise he hasn't a chance to carry any State in New England."

* * * *

Chicago, Sept. 16 (AP).—Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the Wilson Administration, accused the New Deal today of "a persistent effort" to nullify the Constitution "by artifice and indirection."

"It is time that the New Deal criticism of the Constitution, as an obstacle to progress, was silenced," he said in a speech prepared for a luncheon meeting of the Union League Club. "To begin with, the criticism is untrue. It is also stupid and ignorant.

"The troubles that New Deal legislation have encountered are not the fault of the Constitution. They are the fault of the New Dealers who, according to Senator Borah, have neither the ability nor the patience to draft legislation in conformity with the Constitution."

Red Chief Answers Attack of Germans

Kiev, U. S. S. R., Sept. 16 (U.P.).—German attacks on Soviet Russia which marked the Nazi "congress of honor" at Nurnberg were answered bluntly today by K. E. Voroshilov, Soviet commissar for war, in a stirring speech before Red troops.

"The capitalists are preparing for war against the Soviet," Voroshilov said. "But we are ready to meet any unpleasantness."

He thanked the Ukrainians for taking care of the problem of protecting their frontier.

"We are supporters of peace, believing that only with peace can humanity progress," the war commissar said after reviewing an impressive parade of Soviet armed might.

N. Y. Mother Sentenced In Drowning of Baby

Newburgh, N. Y., Sept. 16 (AP).—Mrs. Dorothy Sherwood, former burlesque dancer and Salvation Army lassie, today was sentenced to from 6 to 15 years at the State farm at Bedford Hills for the drowning of her 2-year-old son, Jimmie.

Mrs. Sherwood, 28-year-old widow, last week pleaded guilty to a charge of first degree manslaughter, just as she was about to be tried for a second time on a charge of murder. She was convicted of murder and sentenced to die in the electric chair at Sing Sing last winter, but won an appeal for a new trial.

Mrs. Sherwood's trial and conviction came about after she had walked into a police station in Newburgh with the baby in her arms, and said she had drowned it because she had no job and wanted to keep the baby from starving.

Efforts to Halt French Strikes PushedbyBlum

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Sept. 16.—Premier Leon Blum tonight speeded the efforts of his government to force peaceful settlement of increasingly grave strikes.

Some hope was taken from the fact employers at Lille, who previously had opposed government intervention in the walkouts and "occupation" of their factories, entered readily into a conference with Blum, Minister of the Interior Roger Salengro, and Minister of State Camille Cheautemps.

Union representatives said they stood ready to consider any proposal resulting from the conference.

Representatives of the workers renewed their demands for speedy application of the 40-hour week and wage increases.

Scattered clashes caused by various political meetings on the strike situation were reported yesterday. There were 34 persons injured.

At Lyon, leftists rushed into three meetings of the supporters of Col. Francois de la Rocque, former leader of the Nationalist Croix de Feu, now succeeded by the new Social Party.

The leftists tried to fire the building, and fistfights resulted. After several charges, mobile guards and mounted police broke up the disturbances.

At Lille, center of the textile strikes, 35,000 workers remained idle, with the situation hourly growing more tense.

One mill official fired a pistol into the air to disperse pickets and was arrested as angered strikers threatened to mob him.

The cabinet, meanwhile, debated the strike situation but left direct moves in the hands of the premier.

Business Men Ask News Strike End

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 16 (AP).—Business men asked immediate action tonight of the Seattle Central Labor Council toward ending a newsroom strike on the Post-Intelligencer, the management of which announced "any plans for abandonment of the plant have been held in abeyance at the request of business interests."

The labor council, organized labor's governing body here, designated the Hearst-owned newspaper as "unfair" shortly after the American Newspaper Guild called a strike August 13 in protest at discharge of two guild members.

Associate publisher Charles B. Lindeman's announcement said:

"At the invitation of a group of business men I was called down to the Chamber of Commerce this morning and this group asked that we defer action on the permanent closing of the Post-Intelligencer for a short time, that they hoped to be able to bring the conservative organized labor elements to the realization that it would be a terrific blow to the community if the Post-Intelligencer was forced to suspend permanently. We have decided to defer action for a brief period."

Veterans Cheer Charge War Is Business Racket

Denver, Sept. 16 (AP).—Men who fought America's foreign wars cheered violently today as a major general and a United States Senator called warfare "a business racket."

Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, U. S. M. C., retired, used the blunt language of the trenches as he told the veterans of foreign wars that "war is hell."

United States Senator Homer T. Bone, of Washington State, said that behind war is the "skeleton of high finance and big business."

Capt. Charcot, an officer in the French navy, made his first voyage to polar seas at the head of a French expedition to the South Polar regions in 1905.

Unheard of for months in that day of no wireless communication, the expedition was feared lost and rescue crews were being recruited in France when the Charcot party showed up at Puerto Madrin, Argentina. The commander was decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor for his voyage.

He led another similar expedition in 1908, backed by the French government and by the Rothschilds, who subscribed $8,000.

Capt. Charcot made more voyages before the World War, and after that conflict he renewed his studies in the polar regions nearly every season.

In 1925, when one of Roald Amundsen's North Polar expeditions was missing, Charcot searched the east coast of Greenland in the Pourquoi-Pas.

Three years later, when Amundsen and Rene Guildbaud were lost while piloting a seaplane to the rescue of the survivors of the Nobile dirigible disaster, the Charcot boat again was sent north.

One of Capt. Charcot's latest significant reports was made to the French Academy of Sciences in April, 1931. It embodied findings by two scientists who had accompanied him to the northern seas, which indicated a complete reversal of magnetic inclination and declination.

Charcot was a member of the French Academies of Science, Marine and Medicine, and wore decorations of both France and Great Britain.

He was twice married. His wife sued for divorce while he was in the Antarctic in 1905. In January, 1907, he married Marie Clery, daughter of a prominent attorney.

Charcot was a lifetime resident of Neuilly-sur-Seine. His wife and two daughters survive.

France Asks Apology.

Tangier, International Morocco, Sept. 16 (AP).—France, threatening complete closure of its Moroccan frontier, tonight demanded Spanish Fascist insurgents offer apologies and indemnity for execution of a French citizen.

The demand followed French representations to the insurgents on September 5. At that time, rebel authorities in Spanish Morocco were asked to explain the disappearance of a Frenchman named Aguilar.

Today French authorities said they learned M. Aguilar, an inhabitant of Rapat, French Morocco, had been arrested in Spanish Morocco and subsequently executed.

Spanish Morocco has been in rebel hands since the start of the Spanish civil war on July 18.

The French consul at Tetuan, in a note to Gen. Orgaz, rebel commander of the Spanish Moroccan zone, demanded an apology and indemnity of 300,000 francs (approximately $19,800).

If the demands are not met by tomorrow, the note said the frontiers might be expected to be closed.

3,000 Reported Executed.

Madrid, Sept. 16 (U.P.).—Refugees arriving today from the insurgent stronghold at Zaragoza reported rebel firing squads there executed 3,000 loyalists after a city-wide search of homes.

A municipal councilor and his daughter were reported to have been arrested, tied together and shot. Three thousand other arrested loyalists, refugees said, were lined up along the banks of the Aragon Canal. Their bodies fell into the water as the firing squad rifles cracked.

Jazz-Playing Musician Admits Wife's Murder

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 16 (AP).—A 45-year-old Musician, who neighbors said has been playing jazz music until the early morning hours, led police today to a rude grave in the cellar of his home and there they found the body of his wife, missing three months.

Taken into custody Monday and subjected to questioning ever since, Ramon Cota was quoted by Police Chief Richard Breitel, of Hamilton Township, as confessing he killed his wife—"partly accidentally and partly in self-defense."

Winchester Mayor Welcomed in England

Winchester, England, Sept. 16 (AP). Officials of this historic town today feted a delegation from Winchester, Va., led by Mayor C. R. Anderson of the United States city.

Anderson exchanged greetings with Mayor Edmonds of the English Winchester and presented the latter with a silk flag, a welcome scroll and a wooden key made from the gate of historic Fort Loudoun.

Mary Astor Gets Ovation.

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 16 (AP).—Mary Astor, attending a preview of her first film since her fight to regain her daughter, was nearly mobbed last night by cheering admirers. She wept at what she said was the "kindness" of the demonstration.

cruiser now on duty in Spanish waters.

The Quincy, returning for tests, will be replaced by the Raleigh.

1,000 Nationals Rescued.

Secretary Hull could not reply off-hand to the probability the squadron might be maintained after the Spanish conflict terminated.

Both the Quincy and the Cayuga have been removing American and foreign refugees from Spain since July. The Hatfield and the Kane are more recent arrivals, replacing the U. S. S. Oklahoma, a battleship, which also had been engaged in rescue work since July.

More than 1,000 American nationals have escaped from Spain aboard American ships since the civil war broke out. All the ships are asigned to nearby ports, for use in emergency only, as a result of the near-completion of the rescue work, and because of the recent incident in which a Spanish airplane bombed the Kane.

Roosevelt Voices Hope for Seaway

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt handed to representatives of the National Seaway Council yesterday a letter expressing an "earnest hope" that the St. Lawrence seaway would reach a successful conclusion next year.

The letter was presented at the monthly meeting of the council, which is working for ratification by the United States Senate of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty with Canada.

Fred J. Freeston, chairman of the executive committees of both the Seaway Council and the National Grange, said the council would proceed on a united front "to bring early ratification of the seaway treaty."

International Rail Rate Parley Opens in Moscow

Moscow, Sept. 16 (AP).—Commercial representatives of the nations the Soviets suspect the most sat down peacefully around a table today with the Russians for the fourth European-Asiatic railway freight conference.

In spite of the recent vitriolic press attacks which followed the anti-bolshevist trend of the Nuremberg Nazi conference, an air of cordiality was apparent today as P. N. Kirsanoff, member of the central commission of foreign affairs and the commissariat of railways, welcomed delegates from Germany, Japan, Lithuania and Manchoukuo. Polish delegates will arrive later.

Thalberg Funeral Draws Thousands

Los Angeles, Sept. 16 (AP).—The body of Irving Thalberg, acknowledged king of Hollywood producers, was consigned to a last place of rest today after simple rites in the Synagogue B'nai B'rith.

This was when Grace Moore sang the Psalm of David, "The Lord Is My Shepherd; I Shall Not Want," and when Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin dwelt for a moment on Thalberg as a husband and father.

The 37-year-old production chief of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, largest of the picture companies, died Monday of pneumonia.

Only a few hundred invited friends were inside, but outside the huge temple thousands pressed against the ropes.

Prison Unit Votes For War on Crime

Chicago, Sept. 16 (AP).—The American Prison Association voted tonight to expand its organization for a powerful drive against crime.

Abolition of the county jail as a unit of the United States prison system was set as the first objective of the campaign.

Extension of the parole system and elimination of politics as a factor in appointments of penal administrators were named as other goals.

The association's indorsement of the antijail campaign capped several days of discussion on the subject, during which the committee on jails called those institutions "completely discredited" and Sanford Bates, chief of the United States Prison Bureau, added the descriptive term "rotten."

Miss Earhart Eager To Fly Around Globe

Los Angeles, Sept. 16 (AP).—Amelia Earhart, who simply refuses to stay down on earth, is "nearly sold" on the idea of going around it by airplane. Her wind-blown bob nodded assent today.

"I'd like to fly around the world," she said, "but I'm a busy person this year. There are other things to do. Next year? Well, one never knows."

The woman who flew over both the Atlantic and Pacific said she has cast herself as a "human guinea pig" for future studies of the stresses and strains affecting aviation's human element. A world flight might be the logical development.

Ousted A.F.G.E. Lodges to Form Separate Union

Four of Five New Deal Units Vote to Band Non-Civil Service Clerks.

Four of the five major New Deal units ousted by the American Federation of Government Employes have wasted no time in retaliation.

A few hours after their ouster had been voted by the Detroit convention of the A. F. G. E. Tuesday, 30 representatives of the AAA PWA, WPA and RA met at the Insurance Building and voted to organize a National Association of Federal Employes to fight for the rights of non-civil service workers.

The group elected John Arthur Shaw, former national president of the A. F. G. E., as temporary president pending permanent organization within 10 days.

Employes of the ousted A. F. G. E. groups and all other non-civil service workers in the Government will be asked to attend the formal meeting.

The new organization agreed to work for two objectives:

To obtain civil service status for non-civil service workers of the Federal Government in and out of Washington.

To induce the President to make it mandatory that non-civil service employes released by one unit shall be given preference, if their records are good, in the hiring of non-civil service workers in another unit.

Shaw, who is employed as a statistical worker in the PWA, announced he would seek an early meeting with Charles Stengle, newly elected president of the A. F. G. E., and William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. He said he would ask the A. F. G. E. to surrender jurisdiction over non-civil service workers to the new association. He also will work for affiliation, he announced, with the A. F. of L.

Lodge No. 245, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, one of those dropped by the A. F. G. E., sent a telegram to the Detroit convention demanding charges that it had a Communist member be retracted unless evidence to support the charge is produced.

The telegram read:

"Newspapers report Lodge No. 245 has been dropped from the federation on the ground that a known member of the Communist party is taking part in the activities of the lodge."

Labor to Study A.F.G.E. Ouster Of 600 Clerks

from rewriting the constitution to place District progressive lodges under the thumbs of the Washington members of the council.

Although mustering their largest strength, liberals and progressives failed by two votes to gain the necessary one-third vote of the convention to block an amendment abolishing machinery for referendum and recall.

The amendment, approved by a roll call vote of 144 to 70, automatically cut off recall proceedings pending against the four Washington members of the executive council—Cecil E. Custer, national treasurer, and Ira Y. Bain, G. Carroll Diamond and Michael D. Schaefer, vice presidents.

One setback suffered by District conservative leaders was approval of an amendment requiring that one of the three vice presidents in the District be selected from the field at the next convention.

Another development was the virtual rewriting of the constitution, curbing the power of the President and giving the executive council power to suspend any lodge, officer or member "engaging in any activity calculated to influence legislative measures" without the consent of the council.

The purpose of the amendment, James G. Yaden, president of the constitution committee, explained, was "to prevent the issuing of any wild statements to the press, as in the Justice case."

District progressives, protesting the loose wording of the amendment, charged it meant that the "council can suspend any lodge for doing anything the council doesn't like."

Other constitutional amendments were:

Changing the method of voting at conventions to a member basis. The present system favors small lodges.

Establishment of procedure by which the executive council may suspend any national officer, including the president, subject to the approval of the next convention. This amendment aims at preventing the recurrence of a second Babcock affair, it was explained, where the council found it impossible to vote a suspension.

Even more stringent tightening of the executive council's powers over individual lodges.

Expulsion of Justice Lodge was voted after two of its representatives—Isadore Weisberg and Bennet Mead—were given 30 minutes to present their case, with a similar time alloted to speakers favoring expulsion. The principal defense of the council's action was made by Custer.

In summing up the council's case, Custer told the convention:

"If you think you can obtain the success you deserve in legislation and in administration work then vote for the lifting of the suspension. If not, vote against it."

Statement Issued.

A joint statement by executive committees of five expelled Washington lodges of the American Federation of Government Employes yesterday described the expulsion as a step "which can only work to the detriment of Government employes and of the labor movement."

"Unsubstantiated charges of radicalism are said to have formed the basis for the attack of the executive council upon our lodges, resulting in our expulsion by the convention. These charges have never been presented to us, and we have had no opportunity to defend ourselves, but are confident that such charges have no basis in fact. We regret that the convention has permitted itself to be misled by the executive council which in its criticism of our lodges has descended to the time-worn device of red baiting.

"It is true that duly constituted representatives of our lodges have never hesitated to express openly their opinions concerning the proper functions of Government unions and have opposed certain policies advocated by the executive council, when we felt that such policies contrevened the best interests of Government employes or violated democratic principles. We believe that the free discussion of problems is the American method of democratic progress. We are convinced that no organization can survive when a mere difference of opinion is regarded as a sufficient reason to expel a minority group.

"Our lodges do not intend to disband. Each lodge will retain its identity and continue to carry on the legitimate activities of Government unions."

Clyde DuBose Quits Post Staff For Presbyterian Cleric's Life

CLYDE H. DuBOSE.

Clyde H. DuBose, 6-foot, 220-pound reporter who has been covering Prince Georges County for The Post, turned in an important piece of news about himself yesterday. He told the city editor he was leaving the newspaper business to study for the ministry, thus confounding those who, having read the wrong novels, look upon all newspapermen as Godless wretches.

He leaves this week to enter Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Va. Three years hence he should emerge as the Rev. Clyde DuBose, holder of a bachelor of theology degree and ready for a call to a Presbyterian Church.

If a knowledge of life is a qualification for the pulpit, Clyde DuBose should go far. As a newspaper reporter he has seen life in all its aspects, good and bad. He has seen an enraged mob bent on a lynching; he has "covered" murders and suicides, raids and riots.

If these things upset him, he never said so. Anyway, he always knew there would be something to make up for them, as, for example, when The Post sent him to Tangier Island to see food dropped from airplanes to the ice-bound hungry natives.

His Career in Epitome.

DuBose was on the job for The Post during the "bonus riots" of 1932. About the same time he got a scoop on the "Phantom Sniper," who shot two Takoma Park girls from a speeding automobile and killed two Washingtonians. In 1933 he reported the lynching of a colored man on Maryland's Eastern Shore, and was in Salisbury when a mob of 2,000 turned on the reporters.

Last fall he covered the murder, still unsolved, of Corinna Loring, the little Mount Rainier stenographer who was strangled to death on the eve of her wedding.

Besides his reportorial work, DuBose has been supplying the ideas for a cartoon, "Are You Superstitious," drawn by Brooke Todd, jr.

Although he should be a more understanding minister as a result of his newspaper experience, the newspaper business has nothing to do with DuBose becoming a minister. The pulpit apparently was his destiny. His family has given the church a long list of clergymen and missionaries.

DuBose is descended from a Huguenot who landed in Charleston, S. C., in 1683. His grandfather, Dr. John Edwin DuBose, was graduated from the Charleston Medical School, but soon went into the ministry. He was a chaplain-surgeon with the Confederate Army, and went through the Battle of Atlanta, now portrayed in "Gone With the Wind." Clyde's father, the late Rev. S. W. DuBose, was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Pokomoke City on Maryland's Eastern Shore. His cousin, Bishop Horace DuBose, of the Methodist Church South, once called upon Bishop James Cannon to resign. His brother, S. W. DuBose, jr., was graduated from Union Theological Seminary in 1935, and is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Cape Charles, Va.

His mother, Mrs. Maude Born DuBose, of Norcross, Ga., is a direct descendant of John Lee, who migrated to Georgia from Westmoreland County, Va.

Clyde was graduated from Davidson College in 1930. He also took a summer course at William and Mary College and did a year's graduate work in history and English at the University of Maryland. He has a lieutenant's commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

When Clyde had left the city room last night, his colleagues got to talking about him. They agreed that he had been a good reporter—yes, and a good fellow, all without ever smoking a cigarette, killing a pint or cussing out a copy boy.

Head of Bakery Put UnderBond In Strike Clash

William M. Edwards, 29, Accused of Assault and Firing Pistol.

The president of the Dutch Baker Boy, Inc., was charged with assault on a union official, discharging firearms and carrying a concealed weapon, and four striking bakers were charged with disorderly conduct yesterday when strikers' activities flared anew.

William M. Edwards, 29, president of the bakery, was released on $1,400 bond on the three charges after he is alleged to have fired a shot following a collision between his automobile and one driven by C. B. McCloskey, official of Bakers' Union No. 118, which is on strike at the Baker Boy.

According to Sergt. William D. Haislip, of the Twelfth Precinct, Edwards jumped from his car with a revolver in his hand after the accident at Ninth and Kearney streets northeast. He fired when McCloskey and four other men got out of his car, police stated. Slight fender dents comprised the damage to both cars. No one was injured in the crash.

Two policemen, J. S. McWhirt and T. J. Nally, who had been on duty at the bakery all night to prevent any outbreak between employes and the strikers, disarmed Edwards.

Edwards told them he had made application to purchase a gun. Police said such a report would not entitle him to carry the weapon in his car or on his person. Permission was granted only to keep the gun in his home.

Meanwhile, Bethesda police were called to Glen Echo, Md., to quell a disturbance between striking bakers and the driver of a Dutch Boy truck.

Broker Assails Putting Further Bans on Trusts

Gayer Dominick Tells SEC Investment Firms Are Regulated Closely.

By the Associated Press.

Opposition to the idea of forbidding brokers from sponsoring investment trusts was expressed to the securities commission yesterday by Gayer Dominick, member of the brokerage firm of Dominick and Dominick, of New York.

Testifying in the commission's investigation to determine the need for regulation of investment trusts, he said, the National Bond and Share Corporation sponsored by his brokerage firm had made good profits and was proof no such ban was needed.

Turning to the Granger Trading Corporation, an investment trust sponsored by the brokerage house of Sulzbacher, Granger and Co., the commission heard from Jeffrey Granger that he and his brother David received $46,436 cash for their holdings in the trust, which eventually traded the majority of its stock for securities of lesser value of another company.

Granger testifield Sulzbacher, Granger & Co. also realized $19,000 in cash for management control of the trust, and an additional $6,000 for cancellation of a renting lease.

Dominick testified his trust increased its original capital fund of $10,000,000 in 1929 to $11,250,000 on last September 8, in addition to paying dividends of $1,290,000 and retiring 20,000 shares of stock for $474,000.

He argued there was no further need for regulation of brokerages, contending they are now the "most supervised and controlled group doing business in the United States."

"In addition to Federal regulation, the registered exchanges, through their own membership, are already tremendously controlled," he said. "The exchanges have their own committees on conduct, their field investigators, all with almost absolute powers. There are no appeals from their decisions—and their punishments are severe."

Dominick said the success of his trust was due to "mobility of investments." He added its management had always maintained a policy of "never being stubborn in the stock market" with the result there was a continuous switching from one class of security to another as times and conditions warranted.

The commission adjourned until Monday, when it will begin examining Boston trusts. The Massachusetts Investors Trust is scheduled for first consideration.

Police Asked to Force Driver to See Child Die

Wichita, Kans., Sept. 16 (AP).—Mrs. T. H. Slothower pleaded tearfully with officers today that a hit-and-run driver be compelled to sit beside the hospital bed of her 7-year-old child, Sarah Jane, as death approached.

Desk Sergeant Paul Watson said the woman telephoned her request to police headquarters when it became certain the child would not live. She died an hour later.

Sarah Jane was struck by a motor car last Thursday as she was riding her bicycle. E. M. Miller, a neighbor, who saw the accident, pursued the driver to Augusta, Kans., where he was arrested. Merlin M. Johnson, held in jail on a warrant charging theft of the car, said he did not remember striking the child.

Deprofitizing of War Urged by Legion Head

Cleveland, Sept. 16 (AP).—National Commander Ray Murphy, calling for a fight to take the profits out of war, headed the American Legion's advance guard into Cleveland today for next week's national convention, at which diplomats and generals will rub elbows with America's doughboys.

"I feel reasonably sure," said the tall, broad-shouldered Iowa lawyer, "that the convention will make the deprofitizing of war the legion's future major program.

Ohioan, 68, Confesses Beating Wife to Death

Marion, Ohio, Sept. 17 (AP).—Charles Warwick, 68, broke under questioning tonight, and Sheriff Fred F. Miller announced he confessed beating his 72-year-old wife to death with a pitchfork handle.

The sheriff said Warwick told him Mrs. Warwick struck him several times with a cane during petty quarrels in the past few days and that finally, "in revenge," he seized the handle and battered her skull.

"Vigilantes" in efforts to strike down agitators and their followers.

In the farmlands around Watsonville American, Mexican and Filipino workers were employed in the fields at 15 cents an hour for a 10-hour day. Contractors, an investigation revealed, were charging them 60 to 75 cents a day for room in shacks and board described as "meager and inadequate."

Tens of thousands struck. There were 36 individual strikes in all, and 50,000 men were involved.

From March until December bands of "Vigilantes," organized among the growers, terrorized the countryside, beating the strikers with whips wherever they caught them.

In January, 1934, a strike raged in the heart of the lush Imperial Valley among 5,000 vegetable pickers. Eighty-seven of them were arrested and clamped into jail.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered an investigation. When it reported, it characterized labor conditions in the valley as "disgraceful," and continued that "many of the workers were living below subsistence level."

Deputy sheriffs promptly routed the representatives of the National Labor Board.

Tugwell Taking Rest.

British Fireproofing Cloth For Aprons, Sheets and Rugs

A cloth that will resist any kind of fire, except furnace fires and forest fires, has sizzled into the cloth market, it was learned here yesterday.

The new product will:

Sabe burns for careless women who lean on hot stoves. They will make aprons of it.

Prevent tablecloth fires for folks who don't like ash trays; they will make tablecloths of it.

Permit the building of bonfires on the living room rug; carpets they will make from it.

The new product is an asbestos cloth, invented by the British and announced in Washington yesterday by C. C. Concannon, chief of the chemical division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Concannon said the English wove asbestos into cloth and dyed the result, like a bolt of woolen.

Thus, he said, they had put on the market beautiful pink asbestos aprons for cooks, striped asbestos tablecloths which will resist the smolder of a cigarette, lacey curtains, and fireproof sheets.

H. M. Aring, representative in Washington of one of the world's biggest asbestos companies, received the news with the report that his firm these many years, had been manufacturing asbestos pants for those who sit on hot seats.

"The only trouble," Aring said, "is that they're kind of scratchy."

But the British, Concannon reported, have overcome the itchiness in asbestos and made the world safe for living room bonfires and smoking in bed.

Browder, Barred, Sues for $100,000

Tampa, Fla., Sept. 16 (U.P.).—Earl Browder, Communist Party Presidential candidate, who was locked out of a hall in which he was to speak Sunday, filed suit today for $100,000 damages against the city of Tampa, a newspaper, a church, a fraternal lodge and a civic club.

Named in a joint action with the city were the Tribune Company, publishers of the Tampa Tribune, the Concord Baptist Church, Lodge No. 12 of the Knights of Pythias and the Tampa Optimists Club.

The declaration setting out the grounds of the suit was not filed, but Browder's attorney, W. L. Bryan, said it would charge that city employes had a hand in the lockout, that the three organizations libeled Browder in resolutions opposing the Communist meeting here, and that the Tribune did so in publishing them.

Action of Tampa officials in denying Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President, access to a public hall, was not in violation of any Federal statute, the Justice Department advised Browder yesterday.

Browder in a telegram to the President had complained his constitutional rights were infringed when he was prevented from carrying out a scheduled speaking engagement in a Tampa hall.

Party Leaders Ready for Final Drive for Votes

Presidential Race Holds Stage, With State Polls Over, Except R. I.

By the Associated Press.

Nominations for the Senate and House having been completed by Tuesday's primaries except in Rhode Island, major party managers began making ready yesterday for the final and decisive stretch of the Presidential campaign.

Integration of State and national efforts presented a far from simple problem in some instances. Intra-party strife over Senate candidacies in such States as Michigan, Massachusetts, West Virginia and Nebraska and some struggles for gubernatorial nomination have raised complications.

Recognition of a new situation was evident in reports of fresh planning for the weeks between now and November 3. Intent upon capitalizing on the Republican victory in Maine, Chairman John Hamilton and Representative Joseph W. Martin, the Eastern Division manager, arranged conferences with leaders of the Eastern seaboard States in New York today.

Brann Recount Planned.

Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee, concerned himself first with the majority credited to Senator Wallace White over Gov. Louis J. Brann in the Maine Senatorial election. A recount will be demanded, he said, on the ground of violation of the election laws. Brann placed himself at the disposal of Chairman James A. Farley for Roosevelt speechmaking.

The last preliminaries will not be over until the party conventions nominate for Governor in New York a fortnight hence, and the Rhode Island conventions select Senatorial and House nominees early next month. Gov. Herbert Lehman is certain of Democratic renomination in New York, and Senator Jesse Metcalf of Republican nomination in Rhode Island; but their opponents remain to be decided upon.

Some Democrats evidently expect Senator James Couzens in Michigan to champion his friend, Representative Prentiss Brown, for the Senate, should Brown finally come through in his contest with Louis B. Ward. The Republicans turned down the pro-Roosevelt Couzens in favor of former Gov. Wilber M. Brucker.

The Couzens defeat, incidentally, was only the second in the attempts for Senatorial renomination. Oklahoma Democrats refused to renominate the blind Thomas P. Gore, who was at odds with the leadership of his party over phases of the New Deal, much as was Couzens on the Republican side. Gore found fault, while Couzens found favor.

Re-election of Senator Wallace White in Maine left 35 seats to be filled in November. Sixteen Democratic and eight Republican incumbents were renominated, including White. Of the other seats at issue, three were vacated by death, those of Senators Fletcher and Trammell in Florida, and Murphy in Iowa.

Rev. Salloom, Syrian Leader In District, Dies

St. George's Pastor, Once a Poor Immigrant, Led Drives for Church.

The Rev. Job Salloom, 53, pastor of St. George's Syrian Greek Orthodox Church and father confessor of Washington's Syrian population, died in his sleep early yesterday at his residence, 1330 Maryland avenue northeast.

Apparently Dr. Salloom, beloved by his followers as a foster-parent, suffered a heart attack. When his wife went to awaken him she found him lifeless.

Dr. Salloom, who came to America as a poor immigrant from his native Lebanon, Syria, in 1903, personally raised the funds which went to build the new Syrian Church at 1009 Eighth street northwest. Beginning his mission about 14 years ago, he spent his own money to go about the Nation obtaining funds for the structure. It was completed here in 1929 and has a membership of more than 700 men, women and children.

Began in Poverty.

The story of Dr. Salloom rivaled some of the better fiction of the era in which he spent his youth. He and his young wife, Phoebe, crossed the Atlantic in steerage, their few belongings with them. They felt that in America was opportunity they could not find in their native land. When they passed immigration officials in New York, they were practically without funds.

Dr. Salloom went to Philadelphia. He was sturdy and young and so he supported his family as a day laborer. Then he observed the work done in the Syrian Church and studied at night for the ministry.

In 1912 he was ready for his life work. He was ordained in New York and sent to Washington to take charge of the old Syrian Church here.

It was Dr. Salloom, kindly, quiet and studious, who christened the children. He married the young couples, blessed them and sent them away happy. He heard confessions and locked in his mind the secrets of his flock. It also was his duty to perform the funeral rites when members of his congregation died.

The Salloom home last night was thronged with mourning visitors, shocked at the unexpected passing of their pastor. In the homes of Washington Syrians candles winked their solemn tribute to the leader who had died. There were few dry eyes in the Syrian colony here and most of the shops of the rug dealers and the antique dealers and the restaurateurs will be closed when services are held for Dr. Salloom.

Surviving Dr. Salloom are his widow, Mrs. Phoebe Salloom; a son, Adeeb Salloom, and five daughters, Mrs. Mary Souri, Mrs. Futin Triantifillos and the Misses Nezero, Seandria and Helen Salloom.

U. S. to Provide Credit in 1937 For Corn Seed

By the Associated Press.

An emergency seed-corn loan program to assure adequate supplies for next spring's planting in the drought area was announced yesterday by Secretary Wallace.

At the same time the Weather Bureau reported widespread rains had helped much of the long-parched region, with too much moisture reported in some localities.

The corn loan program, financed with $10,000,000 advanced by the Reconstruction Corporation to the Commodity Credit Corporation, will provide two types of loans.

On selected and tested seed corn, a loan of $1.75 a bushel will be made on up to 1,000,000 bushels, with an option for Government purchase up to April 1 at $3.50.

The second type will be 55 cents a bushel on corn "of good quality which can be sorted for seed at a later date," with a Government purchase option at $1.50 a bushel, also expiring April 1.

No limit was announced on the number of bushels on which 55-cent loans may be made.

Since the Government is not obliged to exercise its option at $1.50 a bushel, and since the loan value is well below present farm prices for corn—$1.03 a bushel on August 15—officials said $10,000,000 was believed ample to finance both types of advances.

The drought summary issued by the Weather Bureau yesterday said States in the Mississippi and Ohio River valleys, the Great Lakes region, and the Eastern Great Plains had been helped by rains during the past week.

Lee Brown Dead; Real Estate Aid

Lee Brown, for 35 years secretary of Arms & Drury, Inc., one of Washington's oldest real estate investment firms, died early yesterday at his home in the Alban Towers Apartments.

A native of Branchville, Md., he was the son of the late Andrew W. and Molly Brown.

Surviving Brown are his wife Mrs. Charlotte B. Brown, and three sisters, Mrs. A. F. Middleton and Mrs. R. L. Hill, both of Washington, and Mrs Herbert Cannon, of Parker, Ariz. He also leaves two brothers, Jay Brown, of Orange, Calif., and Andrew W. Brown, jr., of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at the W. W. Chambers undertaking establishment at 2 p. m., followed by burial in St. John's Cemetery, Beltsville, Md.

SILVER

TODAY'S GIFT—TOMORROW'S HEIRLOOM

TIME marches on but silver remains the same . . . ageless . . . immutable . . . and infinitely beautiful.

There is magic in its pale luster . . . there is romance, so dear to a woman's heart. Whether it is for her wedding . . . or an anniversary . . . or as a gift to her first born—silver is always in good taste.

There is something personal about a gift of silver, that stands the test of time. For silver is a gift to be handed down from father to son . . . from mother to daughter . . . for generations to come.

And this strange quality which has so gripped the human imagination is almost unique with silver, in this fast moving world of ours today.

Time was when the boys were raised to carry on their father's work . . . when daughters grew up in fine old mansions, again to raise a family in surroundings hallowed with family traditions. Times have changed.

But not for silver, for silver can move to the ends of the earth and yet maintain its own identity. It does not lose one iota of its value . . . intrinsic . . . artistic . . . or sentimental. Modern as tomorrow . . . ancient as all eternity . . . silver is the gift of gifts.

+

For three generations Washington has looked to Woodward & Lothrop for the best of everything. Not interested in mere volume, nevertheless Woodward & Lothrop sells a large part of the fine silverware that is sold in Washington. Partly responsible for this is the large and fine stock of silver always shown by Woodward & Lothrop. Partly responsible is the knowledge and taste of the buyer who knows how to obtain beautiful workmanship without paying a price premium.

But chiefly responsible is the confidence that the public places in the name of Woodward & Lothrop as representing the best tradition of an industry in which so many things depend on integrity and skill.

Gift Service for Brides

Silver comes in a wide range of patterns and decorative motifs. From Gothic to Modern, we have examples of them all. We shall be glad to give you the background of each pattern.

We keep a record of patterns chosen by brides, and record the purchases of their relatives and friends to prevent duplication of pieces as far as possible. This information is available to anyone who may wish to give the bride or prospective bride silver to match the pattern of her choice.

Roper to Offer Plan to Avert 'Boom' in U. S.

Secretary Couples Prediction of Great Era With Stern Caution.

By the United Press.

Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper yesterday said the nation is approaching "one of the greatest eras in its history" and sternly cautioned segments of business against promoting "boom conditions" similar to those which brought about an economic collapse in 1929.

His warning came 24 hours after President Roosevelt and a group of powerful insurance executives considered potential dangers of excessive speculation in land values at a White House conference and discussed methods of mutual co-operation in curbing this evil.

The cabinet minister did not identify the "segments of business" to which his remarks were addressed. His optimistic forecast, he indicated, was based upon reports reaching various Government agencies. These included a statement by the Treasury that income tax collections during the first two weeks of September exceeded those of the same period last year by $40,000,000.

25 Per Cent Increase.

In addition, Roper said, tabulations of the retail business census for 1935, and the biennial census of manufacturers reported that retail sales in 1935 increased from 25 per cent to 68 per cent over those of 1933. The largest gain in sales was made in Montana—68 per cent. The same State also showed the largest increase in the total number of workers re-employed in this business and in pay roll boosts, 34 per cent and 56 per cent respectively.

First tabulations in the business census, it was stated, showed retail sales in Alabama from 1933 to 1935 increased 24 per cent; Maine, 25 per cent; Washington, 42 per cent; Nevada, 49 per cent. The total number of stores in these States, the report stated, also increased during this period.

Long-Term Upswing.

"We have entered not a temporary, but a long-term upswing in business," Roper said. "We are approaching one of the greatest eras in American history. One of the greatest difficulties we face is to prevent segments of business from creating boom conditions."

Roper said he would make the first move to cope with this situation today when the Commerce Department's business advisory council, composed of outstanding business and industrial leaders throughout the Nation, holds one of its regular meetings. He said he would suggest to the council the advisability of creating within the Commerce Department a "clearing house" for business and industrial data.

The proposed unit, Roper explained, would provide the same services for industry that the Bureau of Agricultural Economics extends to the farmer. Voluminous data on business and industrial problems and conditions made available through the NRA experiment are being studied by the council and a report will be made thereon in mid-December, Roper said.

No attempt will be made to force these services upon industry, the cabinet minister said.

"We want to find out first whether business wants this aid and if so along what lines it wants the division organized," he explained.

A continued rise in re-employment was forecast by Roper. His prediction, he said, was justified by a major building program which will continue from five to ten years and by the appearance of new industries which will provide work for many unemployed today. Among these new industries he named air conditioning.

How you will feel in the years ahead largely depends on how you live now. Consider those years in choosing whiskey. Say "Seagram's" and be sure of a most wholesome form of whiskey.

● How can you be sure that a whiskey agrees with you?

You can try it and watch results—or you can take as your guide the verdict of a recent, thorough research into the question, "How does the human system respond to different forms of whiskey?"

This research, conducted by a group of trained, impartial, fact-seeking men engaged for the purpose by the House of Seagram, has declared Seagram's Crown Blended Whiskies to be "A MOST WHOLESOME FORM OF WHISKEY".

This means they are not only fine-tasting whiskey, but the form of whiskey most likely to agree with the average man. When he takes them in moderation they are easy, considerate, kind. You may choose them with confidence.

U. S. to Import 42,000,000 Bu. Of Wheat in '36

Record Figure Estimated by Experts; Exports Near New Low.

The United States will have to go to other nations this year for more than 42,000,000 bushels of wheat needed for domestic consumption, due to sharply curtailed carryovers and drought shortages of hard red spring and durum grain, it was estimated here yesterday.

Never before in history has the United States imported that much wheat for consumption purposes, statistics of the Agriculture and Commerce departments showed. At the same time, exports of the commodity were at an all-time low, with the single exception of last year.

For the last two years the United States, formerly one of the largest wheat exporting nations, has been on an import basis. First intimation of how much of the domestic wheat was due to crop reduction, and how much to drought, was made yesterday in a preliminary estimate by one group of Agriculture Department experts, confined to the 1934 crop.

Control and Drought.

This group estimated that 50,000,000 bushels of the 1934 crop reduction was due to AAA control measures, and 300,000,000 bushels to drought. No estimate was given on how AAA control affected the 1935 crop. As the United States was forced to import 27,000,000 bushels of wheat in that year, it appeared this country would still have been on an export basis in 1935, had it not been for the estimated 50,000,000 AAA slash in the previous year.

In every month of this year, imports of wheat have been running well ahead of purchases from abroad in 1935. In the last two and one-half months, they have more than doubled imports in the comparable period of last year.

Wheat imports from Canada alone from July 1, through September 12, totaled 11,130,000 bushels, against 4,293,000 in the same week of last year. From other nations, the United States imported approximately 3,000,000 bushels in the same period. In the first six months of the present year 13,518,263 bushels of wheat were brought in from abroad. This would bring total wheat imports through September 12, to 27,648,263 bushels, compared with 27,439,000 bushels for the entire 12 months of last year.

Short World Market.

The United States must buy this wheat in a short world wheat market. The Bureau of Agriculture Economics estimates this year's world wheat supplies outside of Russia and China are likely to be about 320,000,000 bushels less than in 1935-36. Canada, source of most United States imports, has the smallest crop since 1920.

Spring and durum wheat, most in demand just now by domestic millers, is suffering continuing damage from the drought.

The total outlook for all wheat is for 630,241,000 bushels, and the department declares soft red, white and hard red winter wheat supplies will more than take care of usual domestic demands, but hard red spring and durum must again be supplemented by imports. Wherever possible, millers will substitute other types, but imports of spring grain still are mounting.

Stores Warned Against Signs On Tax Effect

Cummings' Hint of Legal Action Brings Sharp Republican Retort.

A Justice Department warning against merchants displaying placards showing how prices are affected by direct Federal taxes drew a sharp retort last night from the Republican National Committee.

Attorney General Cummings at a press conference yesterday admonished merchants against display of such placards in their stores, charging they are "politically inspired." He said they possibly are in violation of Federal statutes.

Promptly the Republican National Committee released an unsigned statement replying it would "welcome a few prosecutions instead of just intimidating propaganda, designed to scare people to stop them from talking about high taxes imposed by the New Deal."

It said:

Attempts of the Department of Justice to intimidate butchers, grocers and little retailers who want to know how much 'hidden tax' they are paying on the necessities of life are easy to understand.

Cummings at his press conference said he had received a number of protests from various parts of the country that some merchants have been posting placards indicating a part of their price charges are due to Federal taxation. He said some of the complaints came from Illinois, Indiana and Iowa, and suggested the placards had been distributed for political purposes.

"I sincerely hope that partisan zeal will not lead anyone to violate the Federal statutes," he said. "It would be embarrassing all around and the Justice Department does not want to be drawn into any partisan incident. I hope this warning will have a salutary effect."

Cummings pointed to Section 1123 of the Federal statutes, which he said prescribed a $1,000 fine, a year in jail, or both, for anyone found guilty of making any written or oral statements in connection with sale of articles, when the statements were designed to lead people to believe any part of the article's price was due to a Federal tax. The law also prohibits false statements in this regard.

"This 'storm of complaints' which has 'reached the Department of Justice,' as described in one Washington dispatch, is rather amusing for several reasons," the Republican statement said.

"In the first place the 'storm' is rather premature. On September 14, the day the 'storm' reached Washington, only a handful of these much discussed blackboards had been sent out, and only one of them actually displayed.

"In the second place, the law which the Department of Justice is now trying to use to prevent the poor and middle class people of this country from finding out what taxes they are actually paying does not impose any penalty, if the statement as to the amount of the tax is accurate."

Magicians to Give Show December 11 To Newspapermen

The day of the disappearing rabbit, eggs that came bouncing out of nowhere, gaudy handkerchiefs that are snatched out of space, and all other sorts of magic will arrive for members of the National Press Club and their families December 11.

This decision was reached last night by the Society of American Magicians, Washington Assembly No. 23, which held its first meeting of the season at the Press Club. The gathering was in the form of a dinner, given by Theodore T. Golden, president and secretary, to his fellow magicians.

The meeting was thoroughly nonmagical, with business the chief concern; Next session will be October 21 at the Press Club. Frederick H. Untiedt is treasurer.

It was decided that on December 11 the annual show, given by the club for Press Club members and their families, will be staged.

Steel Labor Again Asks Rise in Pay

Pittsburgh, Sept. 16 (U.P.).—A statement in which demands for a 15 per cent wage increase were reiterated was received by the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co. today in reply to its recent announcement that wage increases could not be made at this time.

A committee of eight, representing 10,000 company union men in the Homestead plant of the steel company, demanded $5 a day for common labor instead of the $3.88 now beng received.

Benjamin F. Fairless, president of Carnegie-Illinois, refused a wage increase to all company employes last Saturday, but left the door open to further negotiations by promising to meet the company union representatives.

Anti-War Odds Decrease.

London, Sept. 16 (U.P.).—Lloyds, insurance underwriters, today lowered the odds against a European war within six months from 50 to one, the rate set in February, 1934, to six and two-thirds to one.

The action was indicative of increasing fears because of the Spanish civil war and the Russo-German verbal controversy.

Chinese Spurn Japan's Order To Leave City

Refuse to Evacuate Pakhoi; Threat to Peace in Asia Feared.

By the Associated Press.

Nanking, China, Sept. 16.—A recalcitrant army tonight blocked China's efforts to comply with Japanese demands that armed forces be evacuated from the southern city of Pakhoi.

Fear was expressed in Chinese circles that the peace of Asia might be threatened if strengthened forces of Japanese marines sought to force an investigation there into the killing of a Japanese druggist in the face of military resistance.

Shigeru Kawagoe, Japanese Ambassador to China, in a conference with Foreign Minister Chang Chun, was regarded as having taken the first step toward compelling acceptance of the Japanese inquiry.

He told Chang Chun the soldiers, remnants of the historic Nineteenth route army which defended Shanghai against the Japanese in 1932, must "leave as soon as possible."

The fifth anniversary Friday of Japanese occupation of Mukden which led to establishment of the Japanese puppet state of Manchukuo, in Manchuria, was feared as another weight on the strained relations between China and Japan.

It was understood Kawagoe advised Chang Chun of Japan's anxiety lest possible anti-Japanese demonstrations in China heighten the tension between the nations.

The national government, acting quickly to guard against disorders, decreed extraordinary precautions for four days beginning tomorrow and barred all parades and similar demonstrations.

AAA Aid Stresses Farm Purchasing

Too often well-meaning leaders of farm and consumer groups are apt to forget that the interests of the farmer, as a producer of food, are closely linked to interests of the family in the city, Jesse W. Trapp, director of the Division of Marketing and Marketing Agreements of the AAA, asserted last night in a radio address.

He took as his topic "Objejctives of the Milk Marketing Program proposed for the District of Columbia."

"The agricultural adjustment act, under which the milk program for the District was developed, specifically contains certain definite provisions designed to safeguard the interests of all producers and consumers and provide equitable treatment of all handlers," said Trapp.

"For the producer, the act seeks to establish and maintain improved marketing conditions for farm products and to re-establish prices at a level that will enable farmers to have the same purchasing power as they did in a base period prior to July, 1929.

"In effect, the law says that in approaching the base period level of farm purchasing power the consumers' interests are to be protected by a gradual correction of the current level of prices at as rapid a rate as is in the public interest and feasible in view of the level of consumer incomes."

Private Lenders Extend Farm Aid

By the Associated Press.

Shifting of the bulk of farm-mortgage financing from Federal agencies to private lenders during the first five months of this year was reported yesterday by the Farm Credit Administration.

The Administration said in a statement that private lenders had invested $273,300,000, or nearly 73 per cent of the estimated total amount of farm mortgages during the period, while Federal land banks and commissioner accounted for $102,300,000, or 27 per cent of the total.

This trend compared with $1,727,000,000 lent by the Federal farm credit agencies in 1934 and 1935, while all other creditors in this field were lending $1,027,000,000.

Banks and insurance companies expanded their investments in farm mortgages during the first part of this year, compared with the same period in 1935, the Administration said, while the volume of farm loans by private individuals decreased slightly.

Inflation Basis Of Knox Fears, Professor Says

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 16.—Walter E. Spahr, chairman of the New York University department of economics, said tonight Col. Frank Knox referred to the dangers of inflation when he said in a much-discussed political speech at Allentown, Pa., that "today no life insurance policy is secure; no savings account is safe."

Speaking under auspices of the Landon Radio clubs, Spahr said:

"Yesterday at the close of the conference between the President and six presidents of leading insurance companies, the company executives issued a statement to the effect that the assets of all life insurance companies have increased by more than $3,000,000,000, since January 1, 1933, and that there are 2,000,000 more policies in force than there were four years ago.

"This statement cannot be construed as refuting Col. Knox's statement. Col. Knox never questioned the soundness of life insurance companies, nor could anyone else who is properly informed. Nor did the life insurance presidents touch upon the only real issue, which is the seriousness of the threat of inflation which hangs over every holder of a policy and every depositor in a savings bank.

"The only security that the owner of an insurance policy or a savings deposit has against serious loss from inflation is to stop inflation. This means that the Government must curb its spending—confine its outgo to the limits of its income. This is another way of saying—return to sound principles of Government financing. Then, and only then, will insurance policies and savings accounts be safe."

Reports "Retraction."

Detroit, Sept. 16 (A.P.).—Dr. Luther A. Harr, Pennsylvania secretary of banking, said today he was "happy to say" that Col. Frank Knox had "retracted" a statement which Harr considered an adverse reflection on the condition of banks.

Harr said that the Republican Vice Presidential candidate "in a speech made recently in Pennsylvania declared today no life insurance policy is secure; no savings account is safe.'"

The Pennsylvania banking official wrote to Knox, demanding a retraction or data supporting the statement, and cited a State law making it a misdemeanor to speak falsely about the solvency of financial institutions.

In an address for delivery today before the convention of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, Dr. Harr said:

"I am happy to say that Monday night at Helena, Mont., this candidate retracted his statement declaring: 'The statement does not refer to the condition of any bank, insurance company, or any other private enterprise. • • • It is not the insurance companies or the savings banks that are unsound. They are as safe as the rock of Gibraltar.'"

In his speech at Helena Col. Knox also said: "It is the administration of the American Government that is unsound."

Church Paid for Book Taken 24 Years Ago

Prospect, Va., Sept. 16 (A.P.).—The Prospect Presbyterian Church has received $1.25 for a hymn book carried away by a child 24 years ago.

In an unsigned letter accompanying the money order, the writer said the book was taken in 1912 and that the money was sent "to pay damages."

The act, the letter said, should not be construed as a work of goodness, but as "clearly the work of God."

left the hotel room he was taken into custody.

The District attorney's office was informed of the alleged plot, Robb said, by Pierce. Detectives were assigned to the case then.

Frooks, according to L. J. Levisse, his campaign manager, is a candidate for the Republican nomination at large for Congress. In 1910 and 1920 he ran for nomination to the Assembly, and in 1922 was Republican nominee for Kings County judge. He was appointed special assistant to Attorney General John Bennett, of New York, in 1934.

Mrs. Krieger is the mother of an 18-year-old daughter.

Pierce has been president of the Alexandria bank more than eight years. He came to Alexandria from Loudoun County about 40 years ago. He was mayor of the city at one time and now is chairman of the board of trustees in charge of the $165,000 fund obtained from sale of municipal gas properties to the Washington Gas Light Co.

Pierce declined to see reporters yesterday, referring all inquiries to his son Carroll, jr., who said the charges "spoke for themselves."

Lose Big Hips Fat Stomachs Double Chins

Lose Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Bending and Rolling Exercises.

There is no mystery about this method. Doctors have been prescribing it for years. It is based on a scientific discovery of the medical profession that excess fat in many cases is caused by a little gland that does not work well.

Every drop of our blood goes through this tiny gland sixteen times a day. It produces about one and one-half drops of vital fluid every 24 hours. The action of this fluid on the blood is much the same as the action a good draft has on the burning of coal in a furnace. It turns on the "draft" that increases the speed with which food and fatty tissues "burn up".

If this gland doesn't pour out about one and one-half drops of its vital fluid a day, many people take on fat.

Doctors find a simple easy way to remedy this condition is to feed this gland the substance it lacks. Then, many people get rid of the excess flesh that swells out their figures in ugly bumps and lumps.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on this same method so generally used by modern doctors. Millions are using them with success. They are prepared by a world-famous medical laboratory. Their formula is given in every package so you know what you're taking.

For 28 years millions of fat people have found Marmola Prescription Tablets effective for the reduction of ugly fat. Don't take chances with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Get a box of Marmola from your druggist today.

The Double Budget Idea.

From the beginning of the budget-making process it was apparent that the District Commissioners have an especially difficult job this year. They have no means of estimating what the Federal contribution to the Capital City will be. If they should assume that a substantial increase will be forthcoming and no increase should be granted, Congress might do some reckless slashing. If no allowance for an increase is made, that might be used as an effective argument against the adjustment which Washington has sought for so long.

It is to escape this dilemma that the Commissioners decided to prepare a dual budget. Following their conferences this week with department heads, they expect to prepare a subsistence budget of approximately $40,000,000 and a supplemental budget carrying funds for public improvements and increased personnel. Presumably the Commissioners' support for the latter would be contingent upon findings by the fiscal relations committee to the effect that the Federal contribution should be increased.

If the Commissioners were authorizing the proposed expenditures, instead of merely drawing up a preliminary budget, their plan would have much to commend it. In the present circumstances, however, their subsistence budget is all too likely to be misrepresented as the Commissioners' estimate of Washington's actual needs for the next year. And such interpretation would be most difficult to refute. Likewise, the double budget would suggest that the Commissioners are determined to spend as much as they can obtain from Congress, regardless of actual community needs.

Washington has asked for an adjustment of the Federal contribution on the ground that the present arrangement unjustly denies the District essential municipal services, even though residents here are heavily taxed. Certainly, then, funds to supply those deficiencies should be requested in the budget to be submitted while the fiscal relations study is being made. Only by sending a complete budget to Congress can the imperative need for a change be effectively emphasized.

Of course, this does not mean that the Commissioners' estimates should be in any way inflated. They ought to represent the reasonable needs of the community within the general limits of revenue that may be available. Indeed, if adequate funds for such essentials as public health, education and police protection can not be obtained through the proposed fiscal adjustment, higher taxes will have to be levied.

Adjustments in the Commissioners' estimates could easily be made before Congressional committees, however, if that should become necessary. For the present the unusual uncertainty on the revenue side should not deter the Commissioners from presenting a realistic budget based on actual community needs.

Unemployment By Edict.

Very natural emphasis has been placed recently upon the desirability of transferring men from WPA rolls to private jobs. Leaders in both parties recognize the importance of encouraging that shift while industrial operations are expanding, business is picking up and harvest demands are at their peak. In actual practice, however, the WPA seems to be responsible for an acute labor shortage in some sections.

Complaints are coming particularly from the cotton belt of Arkansas. WPA officials in Mississippi suspended work on all relief projects in the delta region so that more workers would be available as cotton pickers. In some parts of Arkansas, however, "an alarming shortage of cotton pickers" is reported, and the WPA seems to be unwilling to relieve it.

A dispatch from Memphis reports that 200 to 250 trucks cross the river into that city every morning, with planters "begging" for labor. The price offered is said to have jumped from 75 cents to $1.25 per hundred pounds of cotton picked. But the WPA administrator for Tennessee contends that few of his men are skilled cotton pickers and that Memphis is under no obligation to furnish pickers to Arkansas, consequently cotton is in danger of spoiling in the fields.

This shortage of labor is, of course, a direct result of the payment of prevailing wages on relief projects. WPA officials are reported to have informed subordinates in the cotton belt that relief workers need not leave their Government jobs unless they are offered a "going wage" in private employment. Under that arrangement large numbers of men would never again be privately employed. For so long as WPA offers prevailing wages for a minimum of work thousands will refuse to face the greater effort properly expected in private employment.

The WPA was never intended to be an agency to fix minimum wages. It can not assume that role without making an even worse botchery of work relief. To continue employing men on made work while farmers cry for aid in harvesting their crops is the sort of policy which brings the entire work-relief scheme into disrepute. Even Mr. Hopkins ought to see that such procedure is the quickest way to bring further discredit upon his organization.

Divided Political Gains.

Many cross-currents, aside from the contest between the New Deal and its opponents, entered into Tuesday's primary elections. Because of those diverse influences the national implications of this balloting in several States are not entirely clear. But each party has found in the returns considerable ground for satisfaction. Taken as a whole, the results seem only to foreshadow a real fight between now and November.

Although the defeat of Senator Couzens in Michigan was expected, the smashing majority for former Gov. William M. Brucker doubtless gives the Landon forces a real thrill. During his 14 years in the Senate Mr. Couzens was unusually popular with the voters of Michigan. Wealthy and independent of party control, he became well-known as a staunch supporter of humanitarian measures. Nevertheless his record can scarcely be classed as brilliant. Certainly it was not such as to justify the bold assumption that he could win the Republican senatorial nomination in Michigan while supporting the Democratic candidate for President.

Since Senator Couzens was sincerely more interested in the national campaign than in his own candidacy he may be expected to continue working for the return of President Roosevelt. But the relatively poor showing made by Frank Murphy, the Administration's favorite, in his successful race for the gubernatorial nomination, suggests that all the strength that Messrs. Couzens, Murphy and Farley can muster will be needed to swing Michigan into the Democratic column. Late returns gave Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald, Republican, considerably more votes than all the other gubernatorial candidates of both major parties.

In Massachusetts the substantial vote for Gov. Curley, who now aspires to be a Senator, will cheer Democratic leaders from a statistical viewpoint, although the prospect of having Mr. Curley in the Senate can not be expected to arouse any great enthusiasm among liberal New Dealers. In Gov. Curley's race with Henry Cabot Lodge, grandson of the late Senator, the result is likely to be decided by the disposition of the significant vote against the former in the primaries.

As if to balance the elimination of liberal Senator Couzens, the Republicans of New Hampshire sent former Senator Moses back to the political oblivion to which he was provisionally consigned by the Roosevelt landslide of 1932. Young and progressive Gov. H. Styles Bridges piled up a lead over Moses which clearly shows how the political winds of the White Mountain State are blowing. No doubt this victory is as pleasing to the forces supporting Gov. Landon as was the denouement of the tangle in Michigan.

The Administration has every reason to be pleased over the outcome in Wisconsin where the vote is split between Democrats, Republicans and La Follette Progressives. A close race for Governor may result, but most of the Progressive as well as the Democratic vote will doubtless be cast for Roosevelt.

A significant sidelight was found in the candidacy of Thomas C. O'Brien, Mr. Lemke's running mate, in both the Republican and Democratic senatorial primary. Snowed under in both races, Mr. O'Brien nevertheless received several times as many Democratic as Republican votes, indicating Mr. Roosevelt as the candidate most vulnerable to the Union Party appeal.

Unsafe Policy, Not "Policies."

The war of words which grew out of Col. Knox's assertion that life insurance policies and savings are unsafe under the present Administration is a perfect example of the confusion that may result from loose charges. Since the Republican Vice Presidential candidate was discussing New Deal spending, he obviously intended to say that savings and life insurance policies are endangered by inflation. Actually he foolishly said: "Today no life insurance policy is secure; no savings account is safe."

The careless phrasing of this statement is the more unfortunate because the point which Col. Knox sought to make is entirely valid. In his address at Helena the colonel amplified his previous remarks by saying that insurance companies and savings banks are as "safe as the Rock of Gibraltar—it is the administration of the American Government that is unsound."

With the Administration piling one enormous deficit upon another, monetary inflation is obviously a real danger. It is not a question as to whether the insurance companies and savings banks will be able to pay their policy holders and depositors the number of dollars that will be due to them in the next few years. But there will be a real question as to the purchasing power of those dollars if deficit financing continues.

In any fundamental consideration of the problems confronting the United States, the importance of the issue raised by Col. Knox must be recognized. To denounce such criticism as the propaganda of an alarmist is merely to invite the very calamity which Col. Knox fears. The inevitable consequences of unrestrained borrowing should be given more and not less emphasis. But strict accuracy of statement is a first prerequisite of any attempt to acquaint the people with the real dangers of inflation.

The Spread In Food Prices.

Buried in dry tabulations of the Bureau of Labor Statistics is evidence of a notable accomplishment to which the Administration may properly point with at least temporary satisfaction, even though unable to take the lion's share of credit for an outcome which it has consistently sought.

The achievement is the elimination of the long-continued spread between the index numbers for the commodity groups classified as farm products and as foods. On September 5, the latest date for which official statistics are as yet available, these stood at 82.1 and 82.2, respectively, these figures representing percentages of the average prices in 1926, the year taken as the base for calculations.

What the virtual identity of these figures means is that the price relationship, between what the producer of food receives and what the wholesaler of food pays, has been restored to the ratio of a pre-depression year regarded as normal. Neither the price which the producer receives, nor that which the wholesaler pays, is as high as was the case a decade ago, but the relationship then existing between these prices has been re-established. On the assumption that the 1926 relationship was equitable, this is a development worthy of consideration.

It is the more worthy of attention because increasing the farmers' income without inevitably penalizing the consumer is obviously not easy. Yet the situation existing four years ago was one which called for solution of exactly that problem. In early September of 1932 the index number for farm products stood at 50.4, while that of foods was 62.3. Prices paid by wholesalers of foods were low, but those received by the farmers were out of all proportion lower still.

A year later these two index numbers had risen to 56.6 and 65.0, respectively, the spread between them thus having been reduced from 11.9 to 8.4 points. By September, 1934, the gap had been narrowed to 2.9 points, the index number for farm products then standing at 74.3 as against 77.2 for food prices. A year ago the gap had broadened again, with farm products at 79.9 and food at 85.9. Lately, with continued rise in the former and slight recession in the latter, equality has at last been attained.

It can, of course, be said that the drought rather than AAA policy has stepped up the prices of farm products. It can be said that price increase caused by artificial curtailment is socially undesirable. It can be said that the elimination of the spread now realized is unlikely to prove permanent. But it certainly cannot be said that the elimination of the price disparity of four years ago is anything but satisfactory, regardless of how this present harmonious relationship was achieved.

In the last years of prosperity the index number for farm products was uniformly higher than that for foods. The reversal of this came in 1930 and grew steadily more pronounced during 1931 and 1932. It now remains to be seen how long the present nice balance can be maintained, or which of either farmers' income or consumers' outlays will shortly begin to outrun the other.

Paderewski In The Movies.

Paderewski is going into moving pictures. First blurted, this news comes as something of a shock. The spectacle of the grand old man of piano and politics appearing on a screen with make-up and studied lines seems slightly undignified. But further inquiry banishes these misgivings.

He will have make-up, yes, but only enough to make his natural features recognizable on the screen. And he will have set lines to render but only those which he might normally speak. For Ignance Jan Paderewski is to play the part of Ignace Jan Paderewski. In a picture to be entitled "The 'Moonlight' Sonata" he will have the role of a world-renowned pianist which, indeed, he is. Production is scheduled to begin shortly in a London studio.

It will be the 76-year-old Paderewski's debut in film. If nothing else, his duties as first president of the Polish Republic added to his strenuous career as a musician have kept his days well filled. But no aversion to having his art conveyed to the world by mechanical means has kept him from an appearance until now. He was one of the first great virtuosos to have his playing recorded for the phonograph. Now the many devotees of music who have come to know the great man through these recordings and perhaps more recently over the air will have an opportunity to meet him almost personally.

At least, they will be able to see him as he plays. Further, for once they will be certain that the hands of the movie hero are actually hitting the keys, that the music this one time is by no possible means dubbed in.

According to a press report, a man was choking on a fishbone when a friend hit him in the back so hard his neck was broken. So many emergency remedies are like that.

The Smoke Nuisance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We no longer use our washing machine because soot blackens washing hung outside. We have taken down our white curtains as it is impossible to keep them clean. Here in southeast Washington large clouds of black smoke shed black soot from a plant on Benning road. I investigated and found it was light company property.

My informer told me I couldn't see the engineer in charge. The man over him was uptown in their office building and it seems he can't be seen either.

I asked several other skilled men about this smoke and they all agreed that if this so-called engineer, who has charge of the power plant knew his business, changes could be made to stop smoke not only in the afternoons but at night as well.

Is there any way such poor operation can be stopped? Is there any city department which checks up on such nuisances? Are there any men in the city administration who can come out here and show these fellows how to burn coal?

Life Insurance Fears.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Roosevelt has requested the life insurance executives to meet him in conference at the White House, presumably for the purpose of having them make a statement to offset the charge by Col. Knox that every holder of a life insurance policy is in jeopardy of losing his insurance if Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected and continues his present policies.

The writer has two policies of life insurance, and regardless of anything Mr. Roosevelt or the insurance executives may say to the contrary he has been gravely apprehensive as to their safety and security ever since the present Administration came into power, because its policies have been destructive of confidence, of business and of the financial credit of the nation. These, if persisted in, are bound to end in disastrous consequences to every legitimate interest in the country.

The insurance companies have their policyholders' money invested in Government bonds, railroad securities, farm mortgages, the securities of the utility companies, etc. With all of these interests threatened and their earning capacity diminished by the Roosevelt policies, and the credit of the Government jeopardized, it inevitably follows that the holders of life insurance policies are gravely menaced with the loss of their insurance.

Maine Liked It.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With rare exceptions, our Presidents and presidential candidates have been men of outstanding personality if not of great culture or high learning.

Speaking as a Republican of long standing, I regret exceedingly that I cannot vote for Gov. Landon; and I hold no public office or Government job either. But the Governor's radio address from Portland Saturday evening was the last straw. In some 30 years of listening to politicians and candidates, before the radio and since, candor forces me to say that this was the most immature and childishly pathetic effort I have ever heard. Though I refrained from doing so, the impulse was there to laugh as the Governor crudely projected his dull words and his still duller personality over the air. It may be asserted with moral certitude that such a man, no matter how honest, is not equipped for the Presidency.

Questions On Kansas Schools.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "But Not the Whole Truth" in The Post concerning the Kansas schools, is aptly captioned for the whole truth is just what we are looking for.

In this consolidation of schools, did some teachers lose their positions and join the army of the unemployed? Did the retained teachers have to take on greater duties? Is the press reports correct in stating that salaries of teachers were reduced to $25 and $40 a month; less pay and more work? Is the total appropriation by the State for schools more or less than usual?

The literacy of a State is not much affected by a year or so lack of proper schools; it takes a generation to bring a State up to a satisfactory condition of literacy.

All these things seem vital to the whole truth in this controversy. A half truth is misleading.

"Taking A Pot Shot."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The return of President Roosevelt to the White House in November is almost a mathematical certainty. It was only a question of time to displace the stigma of public opinion with that of common sense and independent thinking.

Americans have a mania for taking a pot shot at their champions when ever a title is at stake.

The dramatic entrance of Gov. Landon upon the stage of discontent had its psychological moments in that it gave us a change of scene, but the material to run the affairs of the United States Government is made of sterner stuff. In this event we can't conscientiously send a boy to do a man-size job.

"Politicians' Brawl."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Relief workers are beginning to ask one another: "Are we not as good as other people?" "Why do we have to make up time for Labor Day?" "Is not Labor Day a legal holiday?" "Are we not Americans since we became relief workers?" "Don't we work as hard, if not harder than civilian employes and Government employes on our project?" "What is happening in the United States?" "Are we in a haze, or are politicians having a brawl and we are their goats" MORRIS I. POLANSKY.

Red Horseman Riding?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Ten or 12 years ago Blasco Ibenez, the celebrated Spanish novelist, poet and historian, then in exile by the Alfonso government, said, apropos of existing conditions in the world at that time, "A Red Horseman is riding the world!"

Query? Is there a Red Horseman thundering at our gates?

Working Conditions In The F. B. I.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having read in local papers the various recent articles relative to accusations that have been made against the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and particularly against its director, Mr. John Edgar Hoover, I have felt no little resentment because of the absolute falsity of the charges that have been made. Inasmuch as you have reported those accusations, I feel that you will be willing to give equal attention to any statements which may be made in refutation thereof.

I have been employed by Mr. Hoover in the FBI for over five years, during which time I completed pre-legal requirements and then attended the George Washington University Law School for four years. My employment with the F. B. I. afforded me that educational opportunity. But it did more than that. It held out to me innumerable opportunities for advancement as my educational qualifications fitted me for added responsibilities. It was not an empty dream of possible advancement but an actuality, and I am now attending a training school for new special agents. This same opportunity is held out to every male employe of the F. B. I. and among those who have availed themselves of it there is an esprit de corps which could not be duplicated.

A particular resentment has been kindled because of the allegations that this bureau is a sweat shop, that unjust overtime is imposed and that its employes are intimidated. Although I am persuaded that the absurdity of such statements should not even be dignified with a reply, my righteous indignation impels me to answer each.

First, consider the sweat shop allegation. As a clerical employe I worked at one time or another in every section of the bureau and can think of no task in connection with its operation which I was not called upon to perform. I feel, therefore, that I am in a position to speak as to conditions in all of its divisions. I learned that work begins at 9 o'clock, not at 9:15 or 9:30 and that the closing hour was 4:30, not 4 or 4:15.

I was taught that the work, consisting of the compilation of criminal records and similar matters, demands absolute accuracy, involving as it does the reputations of millions of people, and, therefore, that any mistakes might prove to be very serious. I have had to account for numerous errors that I have made, and each time I have felt that something I had done had been detrimental to the work in which I was engaged. An agitator might label such conditions a sweat shop. I regard them as fundamental to success; as the best business training I could get.

A sweat shop! Just how many of us could find comparable hours or wages any place else in the country?

Second, the overtime. I am proud to admit that I have put in many haurs of overtime, but I deny that I was ever forced to do so. I know I am conservative when I say that it exceeds, on an average, any that was put in by those who protest so strongly against it. But I could see, as anyone can, that the nature of criminal investigative work is such that the exigencies of any case may require intensive activity at certain times. No adjustment of personnel could possibly preclude the requirements for extra work at certain times. But in five years, the overtime has never been such that it interferred in any way with my attendance at school or with my preparation for classes. On the other hand, my work was most helpful, and on frequent occasions my superiors discussed legal problems and cases with me that proved very beneficial.

Third, the alleged intimidations. I can't do other than call this accusation utterly ridiculous. To prove that the antithesis is the actual case, stands the fact that bureau employes are encouraged to participate actively in the conduct of its work and the regulations governing it. Twice each year, by personal letter to each employe, Mr. Hoover has invited suggestions which employes may care to advance. I have had the opportunity of submitting such suggestions, and while many of them have not merited adoption, others have been incorporated into the bureau's work and policies. Then, too, there are the social, dramatic and athletic activities to refute further the charges of intimidation, and a great percentage of bureau employes participate in these.

In conclusion, permit me to pay humble tribute to a man whom I sincerely respect and greatly admire, Mr. John Edgar Hoover. He has had every bureau employe in his office and invited them to come to him with their problems. I have gone to him on matters both official and personal. I shall always cherish the advice he has given me. I know that my life is better for my having known him and partaken of the training in the organization which he heads. GEORGE J. ROSS.

The Post Impressionist

Fame-Market Quotations.

Post Office, Thursday.

THE Knox in question is not to be confounded with a certain candidate for the Vice Presidency. The Knox in question is a dead one, was named William and had far more in common with John than with Frank. Nevertheless, William, who lived in Scotland, would have been thoroughly at home at a shop I know in the District of Columbia.

* * *

A solid century has passed since William, who was a poet, asked a question which, later, Lincoln often repeated. The Scot's own answer thereto has been considered as, humanly speaking, too pessimistic. Your columnist, however, has just heard the reply of a Washington expert—and this gentleman outknocks, or knocks out, William.

"Oh, why," inquired William, "should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

"In 99 cases out of a hundred," says the expert, "it's only because it has an entirely false opinion of its own importance."

* * *

Well, this fellow ought to know. He has lived a long life in Washington, whither, we Americans are wont to assume, come all the greatest of our country's great—and he is that acid-tester of reputations, a dealer in autographs.

"Other people's importance is no matter of sentiment with me," he says. "I've got to make a living by betting as right as possible on the fluctuations of the fame-market."

He makes quite a good living, too.

* * *

"Of course," says he, "I'm not contending that fame and worth are the same thing, nor yet that the quality of rarity in the autographs of any famous person doesn't add a high percentage to their value. There are probably millions of people deserving more fame than that Button—or Burton—Gwinett. I'm just stating facts.

* * *

"The really active trading, the exciting play, in this market comes immediately after the death of some popular political personage, or one that was big in the news. Right off, there's going to be a demand for his autographs, even if nobody thought much about demanding them the day before. The one thing you can be sure about the deceased is, he'll not be producing any more autographs—unless you believe in spiritualistic slate-writing, and we dealers never touch that. So I always tell a big-shot politician our motto is 'If you'll die, we'll buy.'

"Even Huey Long was an example of this. A later example's Representative Zioncheck. Last February, Zioncheck's notes for a speech weren't worth a cent. The day after he jumped out of a Seattle window, they went up to a dollar for five pages.

* * *

"But how long is such a demand going to last? That's where experience of fame, and judgment of it, comes into the business. The autograph-market is just like any other market. If you hold for a rise, you may get stung—or you may lose if you don't hold.

"Zioncheck autographs began to decline three weeks ago. Today there are practically no bids for them at all.

* * *

"Standard personalities don't come into the really active market, much. Lincoln and Lee autographs, for instance: they're more investments than trading-material. The fun of our gambling lies outside the gilt-edge class, though it's altogether in a class that has some chance—in the popular opinion—of some day becoming gilt-edge.

* * *

With old hands, heavily veined and none too steady, he went to one of those shelves. He blew away dust-clouds. He produced letters, manuscript speeches, of men whose names would once fill the spectators' galleries of House and Senate, and the bodies of most of whom are now themselves mere dust . . .

* * *

There was the text of a magazine article, advice to youth, by Albert J. Beveridge—typewritten, but heavily corrected in the firm chirography of that Young Man of the First Roosevelt Era: "If it was a page for his life of Marshall, it might be worth something."

And there was a Fourth of July address by the late Senator Vest. "Beveridge used to wear the fanciest waistcoats in Washington," sighed the expert, "and Vest used to make the best mint juleps. I could always start a controversy by the question: 'Which is more enlivening—Senator Beveridge's vest or Senator Vest's beverage?' But these autographs will never leave my shop till they go to the fire.

"For one thing, both those boys wrote too much, and for another——"

The expert shrugged.

* * *

"If you want to know whether a former Representative or Senator is famous," said the expert, "don't read the things they print about him in the Congressional Record. Just find out how much his autograph's worth."

Fair Enough

By WESTBROOK PEGLER.

"Old Ironpants."

I have never met Gen. Hugh Johnson, so I don't think I can be accused of log-rolling or back-scratching when I remark that "Old Ironpants," as the boys used to call him around the NRA, is turning out a really good newspaper column these days. This is a bit of a surprise, because a year or two ago, whenever it was that Old Ironpants made his first attempt in this line of work, he seemed to be writing with his elbows, and apparently didn't have what it takes.

He was hot for the first few days, but this is a long-haul job, writing a daily column, and pretty soon they began to shove him back toward the goiter cures and electric belts, as we say in our business.

Then he suddenly found his stuff again, and now Old Ironpants is back in the regular line-up, and a star at that. I guess his trouble was, the first time in the league, that he was putting in long hours trying to save the country on the side and didn't realize that either task is a full-time job in itself.

Although I never met him, I used to see the General pretty often in the Commerce Building in Washington when he was trying to organize all business, from locomotive and steamship building to street vending, under arbitrary codes, in hot, muggy weather, and losing ground every day.

• • • •

Hotels Full of Business Men.

The hotels were full of business men and labor representatives, most of whom apparently wished to co-operate, but the confusion was beyond imagining, because you can't realize how many lines of business there are in this country until you try to make hard and fast rules of competition and employment for each one. A lot of the men called down to Washington for the conference never could find out where they were supposed to confer or with whom and, with their hotel bills running up and their trousers sticking to the chairs, they began to lose interest.

One day, in a sort of theater in the Commerce Building, after a sand and gravel man had finished a little lecture on conditions in his business, another man got up and began to protest that the code proposed for the house-to-house canvassing and demonstrating business didn't fit his particular branch of that business. The code didn't want married women, working part time, for pin money, competing with full-time men who had families to support.

"Pardon the interruption," said the chairman of the meeting, "but what did you say your business is?"

"Corsets, girdles and brassieres," the man said.

Right there it seemed that the problems involved in the NRA were too infinite for government control.

• • • •

He Goes Down Swinging.

Nevertheless, Old Ironpants believed in the NRA, and he went down swinging with an immortal wisecrack when he referred to the fatal lawsuit as the sick-chicken case. They tell me that to this day if you even hint that the NRA seemed to have some minor imperfections, he will hit you with everything in the room, and then start hauling down the house, brick by brick, and crease you with each separate brick apart.

He was the only public man in Washington who wasn't afraid to take a full wind-up and belt Huey Long and Father Coughlin, knowing they both fought tom-cat rules, yet, after Huey died, Hugh Johnson, on a trip through Louisiana, wrote a very sentimental little piece about Huey as a tough little fighter who was a pretty good friend of the friendless after all.

Maybe you haven't noted that old Theodore Bilbo, the tough guy from Mississippi, who was supposed to step in and slap Huey around one of those afternoons in the Senate, as a favor to the Administration, never did get out of his chair.

Anybody who fought Huey had to be prepared for a free-style brawl with no personalities barred, however painful, and Ironpants alone was willing to take him.

• • • •

Great Equipment for His Job.

Aside from his experience and reading, which are great equipment for his job, I like Old Ironpants' column for the wild, somewhat hilarious joy with which he sails into an argument. Sometimes it is a little cruel because he is such a tremendous puncher and, like Dempsey, once that bell rings he knows nothing but punch, punch, punch until something drops. He loves to tackle those stiff, straight-up-and-down, stylish debaters who use the fancy words.

I realize that this is an unusual sort of a column, plugging another columnist's stuff, because Macy doesn't advertise Gimbel, and we are both working the same side of the street. Still, Old Ironpants is a public man and a figure of our time in the U. S. A., and I imagine that years from now, when the historians are writing about the fury of this campaign, they will poke around in Hugh Johnson's stuff to recall the spirit of the fight.

The Once Over

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

One of F. P. A.'s contributors announces his willingness to supply picnickers with sand and ants put up in convenient packages so they can stay home and have just as much fun. The idea has the indorsement of Elmer Twitchell, who years ago made a killing by putting up Fireside Wasps in packages of a dozen so back-seat drivers could do their screaming at home.

• • • •

This summer Mr. Twitchell did quite a business selling the Twitchell Combination Fly and Porch Lure for people who couldn't afford to stay at summer hotels but wanted all the sensations. Mr. Twitchell supplied 100 flies and six ounces of ice cream cone crumbs for a dollar, with the wrapper of a lollipop thrown in. By merely scattering a few crumbs or a bit of lollipop wrapper anywhere and releasing a dozen flies, anybody could get the atmosphere of a summer night on a hotel veranda.

• • • •

It had been Mr. Twitchell's ambition to develop moths of such high mentality that they would want to do something loftier than hide in dark closets and devour clothes, but years of experience convinced him that, while he could train a moth to think, it was impossible to train one to worry about its future.

• • • •

"I developed the famous moth Flannel's Pursuit III,'" said Elmer today. "He was by 'Rags and Tatters' out of the great brood moth 'Chewing Belle V.' He was a smart moth and I got him so he really knew there were better things in life than destroying wardrobes, but he just didn't give a damn.

• • • •

"Once in a moment of penitence, after I had caught him in my dress trousers, he offered to give up the wardrobe life and become a bug in a rug, but I could see no difference."

• • • •

It seems that Mr. Twitchell has abandoned doing anything with moths now, but has a novel idea, which he will soon market.

• • • •

He will sell a Midget Gimlet Set to retail for about 50 cents which can be used to bore holes in your own clothes. These holes will be exact reproductions of moth holes, and when the moths invade a closet and see them they assume the job has been completed and leave at once.

Reform In Geneva

By Livingston Hartley.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

THE MAIN TASK of the Assembly of the League of Nations, which meets next Monday, is the reform of the constitution of the League. The last three weeks have seen an intermittent stream of official documents flowing into the League Secretariat—the suggestions of member governments for improvement of "the application of the principles of the Covenant."

Last July, after the Ethiopian failure, the usual chorus proclaimed the League to be bed-ridden, if not in dying condition. Drastic remedies were prescribed as necessary to restore the invalid institution to even a semblance of health. Yet, as Covenant reform approaches the stage of action, we see that these prescriptions and forecasts held the usual degree of exaggeration common to the periodic prophecies of disintegration at Geneva.

It now appears that any actual reforms will be very limited in scope. The proposals of members states, for example, show a general agreement that no amendments to the Covenant should be attempted, since amendments have proved in practice as difficult to carry to final adoption as changes in our American Constitution. It is now suggested on every hand that Covenant revision should be brought about by new interpretations of existing articles, by rulings of the Council or Assembly, or by the adoption of special supplementary protocols.

Another reason for belief that actual Covenant reforms will not be drastic lies in the conflicting views of members states, which indicate that final solutions will be based on compromise. There are now two opposing camps on League reform, the nations which wish to strengthen the security guarantees of the Covenant, and the nations which wish to weaken these guarantees in the hope of making the League universal. The proposals received at Geneva show that the first of these camps, the strengtheners, have the weight of numbers and influence on their side.

Last Reform Discussion Heard Over 3 Years Ago.

IT IS nearly three years since the last serious agitation for League reform. There was then the same division of opinion between strengtheners and weakeners which exists today. At that time, however, the case of the weakeners could be buttressed by two arguments which are no longer valid.

Prior to the Italian attack on Ethiopia, the sanctions of Article 16 had never been put into force. These sanctions had never proved a practical instrument in 13 years of League history. It was easy to argue, therefore, that such theoretical provisions should be dropped in order to overcome the reluctance of certain nations, notably the United States, to membership in the League.

Today, however, sanctions have been employed against one of the great powers. The sanctions enforced did not prove effective enough to be conclusive, but they established two facts: First, that sanctions were a practical instrument; second, that they could be carried out faithfully by most members states. A precedent for the future has now been made, a new technique in international affairs put into actual practice, and valuable lessons learned. The result is that the overwhelming majority of governmental proposals for Covenant reform cling to the sanctions system as an indispensable means of maintaining peace.

In 1934, moreover, there appeared to be some ground for hoping that the deletion of Articles 10 and 16 from the Covenant might bring the United States into the League. Such a hope would have little reasonable basis today. The last two years have been a period of increasing nationalism on both sides of the Atlantic. They have also witnessed an increasing European armament race and war threat which has strengthened the case of the American isolationists. New guns in Europe furnish with ammunition those over here who would avoid any connection with Geneva, in the happy belief that non-co-operation with Europe during peace may somehow lead to non-co-operation with Europe during war.

Covenant Strengtheners Appear To Be In Majority.

The Covenant strengtheners, accordingly, seem to be in the saddle. Argentina and Uruguay alone have suggested weakening the Covenant in the hope of universality. Russia, France and an imposing list of governments have taken the other tack, that of strengthening the League's anti-war machinery. What line may we expect the strengthening process to take?

Article 11, under which the Council or the Assembly takes "any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations" when any threat of war is brought to its attention, has been proved by the settlement of over 30 international disputes to be the most useful article in the Covenant. There exists, however, one outstanding weakness in this article—the fact that the Council can act only by a unanimous vote which includes the parites to the dispute. A nation planning war, such as Italy just a year ago, is in a position to veto by its vote any action of the Council designed to prevent hostilities.

There now seems to be general agreement that the parties to a dispute should be excluded from a vote under this article, as they are under Article 15. Such a change would represent a further inroad on national sovereignity difficult to carry out. It would be, however, of the first importance as a practical measure of war prevention, justifying all the palaver that has been made about League reform.

Article 16, providing for sanctions, will be, as it has always been, a battleground of diverse opinions at the Assembly. Here, however, a definite trend may now be seen toward regional responsibility.

The Ethiopian war brought a practical test of this article which has given new weight to a view already held by many observers. It has shown that when a great power has thrown its entire population and resources into the exercise of force, it can be brought to a halt only by the threat or use of superior force by the international community. Nations, however, are willing to employ a degree of force which may mean war only when their vital national interests are directly affected.

Military Sanctions Must Apply Regionally.

COLLECTIVE SECURITY, according to this viewpoint, must rest in the last analysis upon military sanctions provided for in regional agreements. Such military sanctions would be employed only when the League Council or Assembly had established the fact of aggression, as both bodies did last October. They would be supported by the adoption of economic and financial sanctions by the less vitally affected members of the League. Responsibility for the maintenance of peace, consequently, would be graded according to the geographical positions and national interests of the different nations. The next practical step towards collective security would be the creation of a system of regional pacts of mutual assistance, not the revision of Article 16.

One other useful interpretative change might be suggested in connection with Article 19, which provides for the reconsideration of treaties. This article was originally drawn at Paris as a part of Article 10, thereby modifying the ironclad guarantee of "territorial integrity." The adoption of an interpretative resolution that these two articles should be considered as interrelated might serve a double purpose. It might, in the first place, draw the question of treaty revision somewhat closer to the center of the picture at Geneva. It might also weaken, in public opinion at any rate, the case of a nation which calls on the League for protection under Article 10 after steadfastly refusing to consider the territorial grievances of its neighbors.

How far the League will go in revision cannot be forecast, since the political and legal obstacles in the path are formidable. If Article 11 is changed in accordance with present proposals, the change will represent a real improvement in the international peace machinery.

The trend towards regionalism in the enforcement of Article 16 is also most important. It will influence, and in turn be influenced by, the conference of American states which is to meet in December in Buenos Aires. It may even provide an eventual bridge in Latin America and the Far East for better co-operation between the United States and the League for the maintenance of peace.

Boys Club to Open Season Tomorrow

The Metropolitan Police Boys' Clubs will open their winter season at 3 p. m. tomorrow, it was announced yesterday by John P. Meshkoff, director. He has afranged a full fall and winter program of activities.

The club rooms, closed for the summer while the boys were vacationing at Camp Ernest W. Brown, have been painted and decorated. More than 600 boys spent vacations at Camp Brown last summer, Meshkoff said.

During the closing week the camp was occupied by the boys band which dedicated a march to Director Meshkoff.

Fuel For War

By BARNET NOVER

Diplomacy By Invective.

At Nuremberg last week Nazi Germany declared war on Soviet Russia, although leaving blank the date when it is actually to go into force. This is the interpretation being given in many European capitals to the extraordinary speeches made by the Nazis against Soviet Russia and its leaders. Unquestionably this interpretation has its point. No such campaign of abuse by one government against a presumably friendly nation has ever before been seen in the annals of international relations. Yet, paradoxically enough, there is only a remote possibility that the war of words will be followed, in the near future, by actual armed conflict.

To be sure Hitler took no pains to hide his ultimate purpose. He emphasized how prosperous Germany would be if it had the mineral resources of the Urals, the forests of Siberia, and the wheat fields of the Ukraine. This can be and has been interpreted as simply intended to be a thrust at the alleged incapacity of Russian Communists, though in possession of vast resources, adequately to provide for the well-being of their people and as an indirect boast of how much more the Nazis have done for the Germans, though Germany is infinitely poorer in natural wealth. But to the Germans Hitler's reference to rich Russian lands is bound to have a dynamic meaning, viz: Germany is poor; Russia is rich; Germany can be made rich at Russia's expense.

That was Hitler's original version of the Drang Nach Osten at the time he was writing Mein Kampf. Apparently it represents his view today. Yet not even a dictator can set aside the facts of geography. A look at the map shows why Germany of its own will cannot at this moment embark on a war against the Soviet Union in order to wrest from the presumably feeble hands of the "Jewish Bolshevists" the Ukraine and other rich loot. Between Germany and Russia lies Poland. And Poland, however distrustful it may be of Soviet Russia is certainly no less distrustful of Nazi Germany. In the past Nazi leaders have flirted with the idea that the two nations could combine against Russia. But the possibility of such an alliance, if it ever existed, has vanished.

Poland Back in French Camp.

The Polish leaders realize that if Russia is a menace, Germany is one of more immediate importance. Once again they have turned to France for aid against the potential enemy from the west. To be sure the old romance has gone out of Franco-Polish relations. The present arrangement is clearly a marriage de convenance. But, as more than one Frenchman can testify, such bonds can be more durable than those made by Cupid. Less now than ever, therefore, will Poland willingly consent to become a German-Polish battlefield. And Hitler's crusade against Communism is distinctly irritating to the Poles. Not infrequently have they been wont to cite Poland itself as Europe's barrier against Bolshevism. To suggest, as the Nazi leaders do by claiming the honor for the Third Reich, that Poland is only a weak dike against the Red tidal wave is insulting. The Poles are a proud people.

There is a far greater danger that the enormous military force which Germany has built up will be hurled against Czechoslovakia, ally of Russia (and of France) than against the Soviet Union. It may be that the smoke-screen of anti-Communism let loose by the Fuehrer is designed to hide plans of aggression nearer at home. But whether this is so the explanation for this crescendo of abuse against Russia must take cognizance of other factors.

Part of the explanation, no doubt, is to be found in the certain fact that the actuality of Germany's economic situation is not as idyllic as that drawn by the Fuehrer. Propaganda can be enormously effective in persuading people to believe almost anything. But no amount of propaganda including the catalogue of accomplishments retailed by Hitler in his program speech at Nuremberg can persuade a man whose stomach is empty that it is full, that the back-breaking burden he is forced to bear is no more than a feather. But the sacrifice can more easily be borne if there is a definite assurance of better times.

Only a little while longer, Hitler said to the Germans, and I'll lead you to the promised land of the Ukraine and the Urals. "There'll be pie in the sky bye and bye."

But whatever its domestic implications the fact that Hitler, in imitation of the Kaiser, has now donned "shining armor," although not to come to the defense of an ally, as did Wilhelm, but to combat the "world's enemy No. 1"—Boshevism—has in at least two particulars a definite bearing on the international situation.

• • • •

Hitler's Bids for Anti-Red Support.

In the first place Hitler is obviously bidding for the support of all who hate and distrust Communism and, therefore, Soviet Russia. Through the aid of these allies, be they individuals, groups or governments, he hopes to isolate Russia, prevent it from establishing an anti-Nazi front and to weaken its existing alliances, as those with Czechoslovakia and Russia.

But the more immediate purpose of the abuse leveled at Russia and its leaders may very definitely be to force withdrawal of its diplomatic representatives from Berlin. Once such a break occurred, and Hitler is obviously unwilling to make that break himself, Germany could then argue the impossibility of entering into any treaty relations with the Soviet. That argument could come in handy at London where, next month, a conference is scheduled to re-establish the Locarno treaties.

What Germany fears is that Great Britain and France will demand that Germany give the same guarantees that it will keep the peace in eastern Europe that the Reich is apparently willing to give in western Europe. A break in Russo-German relations might even force postponement to an indefinite future of the Locarno parley. If Russia can be egged on by a Nazi campaign of abuse into taking the first step to cut the diplomatic ties between Moscow and Berlin, all the better.

Coming Events

By WILLIAM LYON PHELPS.

Already many interesting and important announcements have been published concerning the coming season of 1936-1937 in the world of books, drama, opera and motion pictures. I am looking forward with keen anticipations to a score of these.

Among them all, two in particular appeal to me; the first is the announcement of the new play by Sir James Barrie, which he wrote recently for the famous actress, Elisabeth Bergner. It would have been played on the British stage last season if it had not been for Miss Bergner's illness. I believe that in this coming season we are to have the privilege of seeing it and then of reading it, for it will be published shortly after its presentation. The plot turns on the story of David and King Saul in the Bible. As I regard Sir James Barrie as the greatest of living dramatists, and as this is the first play he has written since 1920, I am living in the daily hope of a definite announcement.

• • • •

The other event has nothing to do with the stage, but is of the highest importance in the world of books. The great English poet, Alfred E. Housman, who died on the first of last May, published during his long life only two tiny volumes of lyrical poems. But these poems are so beautiful that they have already been accepted as classics and belong apparently to the future as well as the present. It is as certain as anything can be that they will never be forgotten. Well, he left a few poems unprinted, enough to fill another small volume. This will be published in America this autumn by Alfred Knopf, and I know of no other literary announcement that compares with it in importance.

• • • •

In the weekly periodical, America, under date of August 8, there appeared an interesting article on Housman by Professor Joseph J. Reilly, of Hunter College. He calls attention to the miraculous use of simple words and simple language and simple meters in Housman's poetry and says:

"Did ever poet do more with less? . . . by some miracle they sing, they stir the imagination, their cadence sighs like a mournful undertone into one's heart and lo! a thing of beauty."

Errors In Literary Digest Poll Of Previous Years Revealed

Trend Toward Republican Straw Ballot Held Due To Selection Of Voters From Lists Of Those Owning Autos And Subscribers To Telephone Service.

The American Institute of Public Opinion polls, the outstanding organization in the country in scientifically gauging convictions of citizens, appears exclusively in Washington in The Post. But other newspapers in various parts of the country are conducting interesting polls. So The Post has appointed Claude E. Robinson, noted author of "Straw Votes—A Study of Political Prediction," to write a series of articles analyzing all straw votes taken in America. This is the fifth article of a series to run until the November election.

By Claude Robinson.

The Literary Digest Presidential poll is the talk of the town.

The magazine has been distributing approximately 10,000,000 ballots throughout the country. First scattering returns are now being published.

Two articles in this series already have been devoted to an examination of previous Digest polls in order to find out how the sampling mechanism works, but the misconceptions that cling to written and spoken discussions of the Digest figures are so tenacious that more needs to be said about the A B C's of the poll.

When considering the Literary Digest returns it should be remembered that they are drawn from a selected group in the population. The Digest uses telephones directories and automobile registration files as the basis for its mailing list. Only people who own a telephone or an automobile can participate in the straw vote.

People who do not own one of these modern conveniences are disfranchised, in effect. This restricts the Digest poll to the higher income groups, the lower income groups being almost completely ignored.

Since people who own things tend to be Republican, the Digest uniformly reports a greater proportion of its ballots for the Republican candidate than are subsequently cast in the official election.

In past Presidential polls since 1916, the magazine has made 149 State reports, and in 128 cases the vote of the Republican candidate has been overestimated.

In the 1932 Missouri election, for example, the discrepancy was very small. In this State Hoover received 35.5 per cent of the straw ballots and 35.1 per cent of the official vote, an error of only .4 per cent. In the 1932 Massachusetts election, on the other hand, the error was quite large, Hoover being credited with 64 per cent of the straw vote and subsequently receiving but 47 per cent of the official vote. The Republican distortion in this case was 14 per cent.

Average Error Percentage.

The average Digest error in predicting the proportion of the vote for major party candidates by States was 11 per cent in 1916, 6 per cent in 1924 and 1928 and 3.5 per cent in 1932.

This error in forecasting the percentage split between candidates is extremely important, for when the error is large, more States are misplaced in the electoral college than when the error is small. How these discrepancies have influenced Digest electoral college predictions in the past is clearly shown by examining the magazine's success, State by State, in terms of the closeness of the official vote.

Altogether in its polls of 1916, 1924, 1928 and 1932 the Digest has made 149 State estimates.

Where the Republican candidate has won by a wide margin the Digest polls placed 65 States correctly in the electoral college out of 65 tries. The score has been perfect in election situations of this kind.

Where the Democratic candidate has won by a wide margin (plurality of 10 votes per 100 or more) the Digest poll has placed 50 out of 52 States correctly. This is an error of approximately 4 per cent, or, again, virtually perfect prediction of the electoral college vote when plurality margins were decisive.

Where the Republican candidate won by a narrow margin (plurality of less than 10 votes per 100) the Digest placed 17 out of 20 States correctly. This is an error of 15 per cent.

Where the Democratic candidate won by a narrow margin (plurality of less than 10 votes per 100) the Digest placed four States correctly out of eleven tries. This is an error of 64 per cent.

In 1924, La Follette won Wisconsin and the Digest correctly forecast the electoral vote of this State.

From the past experience of the Literary Digest, it is clear, then, that the success the magazine enjoys in accurate placement of States in the electoral college depends upon the closeness of the contest.

In 117 cases, or about three-fourths of the time, its problem has been to forecast the outcome of one-sided elections. In these cases the Republican distortion in the poll has not interfered with correct electoral college predictions, only two errors being made in declaring the winner by States.

Difficulties of Digest Poll.

In 20 more cases, Republican candidates have won by small pluralities. When confronted with this type of forecasting problem, the Digest error in placing electoral votes has been only 15 per cent. Republication distortion, which characterizes the Digest sample, has made little difference in the end result because the Republican candidate won.

The Digest could have reported for the Republican contender any proportion over 51 per cent and there would have been no error in forecasting the electoral vote.

Where the Digest has run into difficulties in the past is when the Democratic candidate has won by a small plurality. In these instances Republican bias in the sample has been sufficient to throw most of these States into the Republican column. When faced with this situation, the Digest has missed its mark seven out of eleven times.

In the current campaign, the Digest should have no trouble forecasting the electoral vote correctly in States like Vermont, which is strongly Republican, or Mississippi, which is strongly Democratic. If Landon wins States like New Jersey by a small plurality, the Digest, again, should have little or no difficulty in forecasting the electoral vote, since the bias of the samole is pointed in the direction of the likely winner.

But in States like Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan and Illinois, where the result now appears to be very close, the Digest will, if past experience is a reliable guide, score a high percentage of errors in those States Roosevelt carries. It is conceivable that under the conditions of the current campaign this factor may even prove decisive in the Digest's prediction of the winner.

Political observers should be fully conscious of these facts when interpreting the magazine's figures.

President Roosevelt has designated nine young men from the District and nearby Virginia and Maryland as candidtaes for entrance into the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., the War Department announced yesterday.

They are: Kimberly Brabson, 4000 Cathedral avenue; Lawrence H. Caruthers, jr., 1918 N street northwest; Robert C. Armstead, Silver Spring, Md.; William Thurmond Gordon, 1918 N street northwest; William E. McCain, jr., 2932 Cortland place northwest; Private John J. McCue, Fort Monroe, Va.; Jack K. Georgetown Class Will Dine Tonight

The Georgetown University School of Medicine will give a "homecoming" dinner today at 6:30 p. m. at the Shoreham Hotel for about 150 visiting and local alumni who are attending the university's extension course for them this week.

The dinner, to follow a day of lectures and clinics, will be informal, school officials said. Rev. David V. McCauley, S. J., regent and dean, will preside.

Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the U. S. Public Health Service and an alumnus of the school, will speak tomorrow at a luncheon meeting at Gallinger Municipal Hospital after a morning medical clinic. He will discuss the control of social diseases. The session will continue through Saturday morning.

3 Powers to Hold Parley in Vienna

Rome, Sept. 16 (AP).—A conference of Italy, Austria and Hungary on central European affairs will be held in Vienna "very shortly," an official communique said tonight.

The decision to call the three-power discussions was reached today by Premier Mussolini, his Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano and Guido Schmidt, Austrian undersecretary for foreign affairs.

The communique said:

"It has been decided—after having informed the government of Hungary which signified its complete adherence—to convoke very shortly in Vienna a reunion of the ministers of foreign affairs in Italy, Austria and Hungary, in conformity with that which was provided in the protocols signed in Rome."

The protocols referred to, binding the three nations closer together politically and economically, were signed in Rome March 24, 1936.

Black Legion Trial Witnesses Missing

Detroit, Sept. 16 (AP).—The disappearance of three State's witnesses added mystery today to the trial of 12 men, alleged to be Black Legion members, on charges of murdering Charles A. Poole.

As the trial proceeded, police searched for the three, Luther Glasgow, Elmer Anderson and Emerson Becker—all admitted members of the hooded night riders—who have been missing for two weeks.

Dayton Dean, confessed "trigger-man in the Poole shooting, and the victim's widow, Mrs. Rebecca Poole, were not called to testify today as planned. After reporting the three witnesses missing, the prosecution introduced more testimony of a stenographer and policeman who took statements from defendants.

Detective Jack Harvill told the Circuit Court jury the disappearance of the witnesses was kept secret in hope it mgiht help the search.

Locarno Talk Deferred.

London, Sept. 16 (AP).—Great Britain today abandoned October 19 as the date for the proposed five-power Locarno conference, because of German and Italian insistance on considerable diplomatic groundwork. This groundwork will begin at once, officials said.

Lines to Unite For Mail Route Over Atlantic

Plans for International Air Corporation Are Revealed Here.

A giant international aviation corporation is being formed to fly the mails across the Atlantic, it was learned here yesterday, after four German aviators, who Saturday completed a test flight, had been entertained by Department of Commerce officials, including Secretary Roper.

Rudolph A. Jahn, American agent for the German Luft Hansa, told The Washington Post, in an exclusive statement, that officers of Pan-American, Luft Hansa, Royal Dutch Airlines, Air France and the British Imperial Airways have laid down their hatchets and will not compete in the transatlantic service, but instead will form an international corporation.

Luft Hansa, the German government-subsidized airline, which already has planes flying in regular service to South America, was the first to send commercial airplanes to America. Two ships, the Zephyr and Aelos, both powered with Diesel engines, are now anchored at Port Washington, outside of New York City.

They made the crossing via the Azores without incident and the German company is optimistic of starting regular service next spring. Another test trip will be made this autumn, probably in October.

That the mail line will fly the South Atlantic route seems certain, Jahn said, because of the greatly lowered wind resistance that way, as compared with the northern route by way of Ireland and Newfoundland.

Race Had Been Expected.

It had been generally believed up until yesterday that all the big aviation companies of the four nations mentioned were in active competition and that there was a race on between them to determine which could establish a line first. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh explored a northern route over the Arctic in his flight with his wife for Pan American.

But Jahn's revelation discloses that the same giant amalgamations which already exist in Europe between airlines of various countries are to branch out across the Atlantic and include Pan American.

Luft Hansa already is tied up with Royal Dutch, Imperial Airways and the Air France. The separate companies have working agreements, which include use of the same ports, nonconflict of schedules and division of joint income equally among the participating companies.

On the London to Berlin flight alternate German and British planes fly the line, each using the other's mechanics, hangers, fields and so forth, with an equal division of profits. The same arrangement exists between the Germans and Air France on the South American run to Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires.

Pan American was actively planning on a North Atlantic line last winter, according to Department of Air Commerce officials here, and diplomatic conferences were held between envoys of Canada, Ireland, and England, regarding landing rights. Last December Pan American announced it would start experimental flights during the summer, but none was made.

Col. Johnson, of the Air Commerce division, stated last night that the amalgamation was "all news to him."

Burn "Gas-Oil" Fuel.

The German ships Zephyr and Aeolus, which pioneered the line, are smaller than the flying boats used on the South American run. They were designed especially for the New York service, and burn a "gas-oil" fuel. They are so heavy they cannot rise from the water when fully fueled and must be shot from a catapult.

Two auxiliary steamboats, the Westfalen and Schwabenland, are stationed in the Atlantic as floating bases for the craft. They are both equipped with catapults. The Schwabenland is steaming to New York now to fling the airplanes into the sky on their return trip, which is scheduled tomorrow.

"Gas-oil" is used on the ships because it is 50 per cent cheaper than gasoline in Germany. The ships are 500-horsepower and weigh ten tons.

The liner will not carry passengers, Jahn said, because there is more money in mail. Passenger ships would require too much space to be practicable.

The four pilots here said yesterday that the flight from the Azores is more difficult than the hop to South America, which they have been making regularly for more than a year.

Hit Adverse Winds.

Head winds were encountered the entire distance, they reported, and rainstorms and squalls harassed the ships midway between the Azores and Bermuda. The first ship to take off, the Aeolus, landed in Bermuda. But the Zephyr continued all the way to New York, a distance of 2,400 miles over water. The Bermuda trip was 400 miles shorter.

The ships have a cruising speed of 140 miles an hour, with a maximum of 156. They carry four tons of fuel. The German line extends from the Azores to Lisbon to Marseille to Frankfort to Berlin at present.

Doherty, Others Called Market Manipulators

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—A charge that Henry L. Doherty and others made $18,000,000 profit by manipulating the market in the stock of Cities Service Co. to the detriment of stockholders was lodged in Supreme Court today by Morton Marks, a stockholder.

Marks' suit, on behalf of himself and other stockholders of the Cities Service Co., demanding an accounting of profits, was revealed when the plaintiff filed a motion to examine W. Alton Jones, first vice president and director of Cities Service Co., and Henry L. Doherty, its president before trial.

Murder Charge Laid to Inmate Of Insane Ward

G. W. Stevens, 22, Indicted in Armstead Killing; Tear Again Accused.

George W. Stevens, 22-year-old inmate of St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane, was indicted on a charge of first degree murder by the District grand jury yesterday following an investigation into the cause of the death of Col. Carroll F. Armstead, retired.

The jurors were told that Col. Armstead and Stevens were being escorted about the hospital with an attendant when Stevens launched an attack on the retired officer, who was 64. One of Stevens' blows felled the officer and his head struck a stone floor, fracturing his skull. Death soon followed.

Because of the fact that Stevens is an inmate of the hospital it will be necessary to bring him before a lunacy commission to determine the condition of his mind before he can be charged with the murder in court.

The jury wrote another chapter in the troubled career of George F. (Teddy) Tear, whose escapades have received much publicity lately. Tear, already under bond in three cases, and under conviction in District Court of conspiring with others to violate the prohibition law, was indicted for allegedly operating a smoke screen on an automobile, Tear, according to Special Agents James W. Rogers and K. O. Spiess, operated the "screen" shortly before he was captured in an automobile at Fifteenth and F streets northwest. Other charges facing Tear are assault with intent to kill, and a police department charge in connection with the gang shooting of Joseph E. O'Brien, in which the Warring gang figured.

Another indictment, reported to Justice F. D. Letts yesterday, accused William F. Daley, 31, former employe of the Army and Navy Club, of embezzling $1,712.65 from the club.

Those indicted were:

John Brown, arson; Robert Lassiter, first degree murder; George W. Stevens, manslaughter; George L. Jeffers, bastardy; George L. Kidwell, receiving stolen property; Noble F. Grill, larceny after trust; Raymond E. Hutchinson, nonsupport; George Frederick Tear, smoke screen; Elsner Miller, abortion; Duncan Wright, carnal knowledge; Neal Mahen, forgery and uttering a Government check.

Willie Walter Lee and Robert B. Storey, forgery and uttering; William Daley, embezzlement; Edward M. Colbert, forgery and uttering and false pretenses; Benjamin W. Vincent, Walter C. Martin, Allen F. Presidential Poll

Contest Column

This column will be conducted daily until October 30, closing date of The Washington Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Contest. Questions of contestants will be answered and other information, helpful to the contestant in predicting the winner of the election and the States he will carry, will be supplied from time to time.

$1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded 34 contest winners, with $500 for first prize. The contest closes at midnight, Friday, October 30.

• • • •

Q. Is it necessary that all prediction entries in The Washington Post 1936 Presidential Poll Contest be accompanied by a letter, describing the method by which the contestant reached his conclusions on who will be the next President of the United States and what States he will carry in the coming election?

A. Yes. All contestants must submit letters of 250 words, or less, telling why they believe the candidate selected will win and how they arrived at their predictions on the States he will carry.

• • • •

Q. Is it of advantage to a contestant to send in his entry in advance of the contest's closing date, midnight, Friday, October 30, 1936?

A. No. As a matter of fact, contestants will be better able to make predictions after the next to the last Nation-wide poll by the American Institute of Public Opinion, the results of which will be published exclusively in Washington in The Washington Post, Sunday, October 18. There will be other polls on the comparative standings, by States, of the candidates this Sunday, September 20, and also Sunday, October 4. The results of these polls, together with other material on the shifting fortunes of the two candidates between now and October 30, appearing from day to day in The Post, will be of invaluable assistance to the contestant.

• • • •

Q. Which States, since the first AMERICA SPEAKS Landon-Roosevelt Poll was taken, appear most uncertain?

A. The results of the last AMERICA SPEAKS poll were published in The Post September 6. At that time 18 States were classified as "Borderline"—States in which the poll indicated a 53 per cent, or less, popular vote majority for either candidate. Wisconsin, Washington, Idaho, Ohio and West Virginia (with a total of 58 electoral votes) were "Borderline Democratic." Iowa, Wyoming, Illinois, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Delaware, New York, Nebraska, New Jersey, Michigan, Minnesota and Colorado (with a total of 208 electoral votes) were "Borderline Republican." A slight popular vote shift in any or all of these States—from Republican to Democratic, or from Democratic to Republican—would bring about a completely changed picture in November.

• • • •

Q. Did Gov. Landon's Eastern trip in August to Pennsylvania and New York—and President Roosevelt's swing through the drought States of the Middle West—cause any great change of voting sentiment in the regions visited?

A. See the results of the fifth AMERICA SPEAKS Landon-Roosevelt poll in this Sunday's Washington Post. This question is answered and analyzed in the explanatory material accompanying the results of the poll.

Richman Spent $250,000 for Planes Prior to Two-Way Flight Over Atlantic

By Ed Sullivan.

Liverpool, Sept. 14.—When you of Broadway read this over your coffee at Dinty Moore's or Dempsey's or Reuben's, Harry Richman and Dick Merrill will have completed their amazing two-way passage of the North Atlantic. But as I write this column, which will fly across the ocean in their monoplane Lady Peace, the sparkling lights of Broadway are missing.

May be true, as the technicians point out, that such a flight as this proves nothing in the North Atlantic laboratory of aviation. But the sight of man eagles, in the dreary blackness of an English beach, preparing to fly bravely into the teeth of gales will bring a lump to your throat and a suspicious moisture to your eyes, for courage need no footnotes to be understandable. And if I were king for 20 hours, I'd make the moon and stars shine out to aid them. I'd temper the gales as they passed and I'd plead with the fogs to dissolve and let them through. For these two will fly the air lanes where even the great eagles fear to fly, and September is an unkind month to birds of passage.

To Harry Richman, Broadway singer and musical comedy matinee idol, the two-way flight means the fulfillment of his dream of the past five years. During that time Richman has invested $250,000 in airplanes. At one time, he had eight of them. While the Broadway crowd hooted at this actor who had become airminded, Richman patiently went ahead and earned records and hung up another record for speed. It was at that time that he determined to fly the Atlantic—not as a stunt, but rather because he wanted to do that more than anything else in the world. Broadway always thought it was a "gag," he told me in the Savoy grill at London. "But I was risking my life, my money, and you don't put up your life or your money for a joke," he said. The North Atlantic storms howl back the answer—an emphatic "No." Broadway today retracts all of its skepticism. Richman, until the end of time, goes down in the record books as a dead game guy. That is the Stem's highest compliment, its highest rating in the files of yesterday and tomorrow.

To Dick Merrill, crack pilot of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker's line to Miami, the heroic two-way flight is the satisfaction of his belief that it could be done. He is a mild, modest chap, this Dick Merrill. You first read of him in this column a long time ago shortly after he had flown a Douglas plane to a new record with Mrs. Eugene Meyer and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson aboard. I met him that night at Hollywood Restaurant through Sammy White and he so impressed me that I did quite a story on him. I flew with him several times, once to Washington, D. C., another time to Max Baer's camp at Speculator, N. Y., before the Joe Louis fight. He was, in every sense, a born flier and when his Lincoln Ellsworth rescue flight resulted in a forced landing, and the news dispatches said that he had been killed, I penned a column that this particular Eagle, returning to his nest for the last time, certainly had not paled when he felt the wings of death brushing against him. I knew that he wasn't the type to choke up when the pressure was applied. I wouldn't fly the Atlantic for love or money, but if there was no alternative, Merrill would be the guy I'd want in the cockpit. Richman summed it all up when he said: "There were only two I wanted with me—God and Dick Merrill." Merrill was with him, and you'll forgive the fancy that God was a stowaway aboard the silver and blue Lady Peace.

If the flight has made history in aviation and in the records of sheer, deliberate courage, it has made history for the psychologists and the neurologists. On every other transatlantic flight, the terrific nervous tension to which the fliers have been subjected has exploded into fist fights. That Richman and Merrill were cooped up in their comparatively tiny ship for some 36 hours and lived together for weeks under high nerve tension and remained friends is a most amazing thing. You know, all of you, how even the best of friends can grate on your nerves after a single night. The tone of a voice can become explosively aggravating. These two, with every excuse for raw nerves, didn't yield to them. That is, I think, the most astonishing feature of the flight.

But I am exceeding my space. To all of you on Broadway, my best regards. And though the advice is needless, treat these two fellows right. Paint the town red, have ticker tape fly and let there be dancing in the streets, for within our generation New York will not have occasion to honor two braver individuals. P. S.: And to you, Harry and Dick, as you head out over the North Atlantic. God speed you safely home.

HELP KIDNEYS PASS 3 LBS. A DAY

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the cause of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Expert Criticizes Roosevelt Remark

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Charles W. Kellogg, president of the Edison Electric Institute, today took issue with a statement of President Roosevelt, made at the World Power Conference.

"The President quoted an observation made years ago by Charles P. Steinmetz to the effect that electricity is expensive because it is not widely used and it is not widely used because it is expensive," Kellogg said. "The President added: 'That observation still holds true.'

"The facts are as follows: Steinmetz's observation was made in 1911. In that year the average annual energy consumption per residence customer in the United States was less than 260 kilowatt hours and the average price paid by residential consumers was 9.43 cents per kilowatt hour.

"For the 12 months ended July 31, 1936, the average annual residential energy consumption had risen to 701 kilowatt hours, an increase of 170 per cent over the time when Steinmetz made his comment and the average residential rate had dropped to 4.84 cents."

Miss Mary Donnelly Wed To Col. John W. Meehan

Uniforms of Grey Ladies of Walter Reed and Army Officers Give Air of Pageantry to Ceremony in Memorial Chapel of Hospital.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

Grey Ladies of Walter Reed in their Red Cross uniforms and floating veils and Army officers in white uniforms gave an air of pageantry yesterday morning to the wedding of one of the original Grey Ladies, Miss Mary E. Donnelly, daughter of the late Lieut. Col. Richard J. Donnelly, U. S. A., and Mrs. Donnelly, and Lieut. Col. John William Meehan, U. S. A., executive officer at Walter Reed. The ceremony took place in the Memorial Chapel of the Army Medical Center at Walter Reed.

Th chapel was decorated with roses, gladioli and white asters. Large vases of the white flowers were on the altar and flowers and ferns were banked at each side of the chancel. Clusters of red roses and white asters decorated the pews.

The bride entered the chapel escorted by Maj. Gen. Arthur W. Brown, judge advocate general of the Army, who gave her in marriage. She wore a gown of ivory satin, made in period style and a Mary Stuart coif with a short ivory white veil, and carried an old-fashioned bouquet of gardenias and bride's roses. She was attended by Miss Ruth Meehan, who wore a dress of slipper satin in a shade of copper rose made with a very long, wide gored skirt and a fitted bodice and hat of copper rose felt, with a wide brim. The bride wore a spruce blue tailored suit, trimmed with gray Persian lamb, with accessories of the same shade and a cluster of orchids on her shoulder. Mrs. Hagan wore green velvet with matching accessories and the flower girl was in a long pink frock.

Guests from out of town included Mr. M. J. O'Connor, father of the bridegroom, and Miss Veronica O'Connor, his sister, from Columbus, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Conrad, of Chicago, and Miss Mary Barker, of Janesville, Wis.

Another wedding yesterday was that of Miss Alice Mae Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Jones, to Mr. Elmer Rodie Hipsley, son of Mrs. A. W. Hipsley and the late Mr. Hipsley, which took place at 11 o'clock at the Marvin Methodist Episcopal Church. The Rev. C. C. Burruss performed the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and wore a tunic dress of gray wool crepe and a blue turban, with gray accessories and a corsage of white orchids.

Mr. John E. Walsh, of Washington, was best man.

Redpath Weds New York Girl

Washingtonian Marries Miss Arthemise B. Ottman at Trinity Church.

Trinity Church, New York, was the scene of the wedding Tuesday of Miss Arthemise Baldwin Ottmann, daughter of Brig. Gen. William Ottmann and the late Mrs. Ottmann, of New York, and Mr. Albert Fordon Redpath, of Washington, son of Mrs. Richard Douglas Redpath, of Montreal, and the late Mr. Redpath. The Right Rev. Charles K. Gilbert Suffragan Bishop of New York, performed the ceremony. Mr. Hugh D. Auchincloss, of Washington, was best man. Miss Harriet Sampson, of New York, was maid of honor. Miss Sherry Parker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey G. Parker, jr., was flower girl.

The bride is a graduate of the Spence School, New York, and attended Miss Nixon's School in Florence, Italy. Her mother was Miss Arthemise Bouligny Baldwin, daughter of the late Albert Baldwin, of New Orleans.

Mr. Redpath is a graduate of Columbia College. In 1930, he resigned as special assistant to Ogden L. Mills, then Undersecretary of the Treasury. He is a member of the Chevy Chase and Metropolitan Clubs, of Washington, and the Downtown Association and University Club, of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin are expected to return to Arbremont, their home here, the latter part of the week. They spent the summer at their cottage on Mackinac Island, Mich.

Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose will not return to the Capital until later in the season. She will close her summer home at Gloucester, Mass., on September 20, and will go to New York City for ten days, and then to Kansas City, Mo.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Young Wife, Married Five Years, Asks What to Do About Husband Who Drinks Heavily; Fears Him.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young woman 23 year old. I was married nearly five years ago to a man two years my senior. I loved him dearly and he pomised me he would not drink. Now he has been drinking heavily for almost two years. He gets drunk quite often and when he is drinking he gets mean, always thinks of a gun or fighting, and falsely accuses me of things I wouldn't think of doing.

• • • •

Now, Miss Haworth, I stay at home and never go any place unless he takes me. Yet I am afraid to go out with him when he is drinking, and also afraid to refuse to go. Often he goes out at nights without me. Now, I try to live a Christian life and would like for him to do the same. When he is sober, there are times when you couldn't find a better man; and other times, he fusses about about having to work and make money until I actually feel I am not welcome to what I eat.

• • • •

I have worried so much I look like a middle-aged woman. Everyone speaks of how I have aged. My mother is not allowed on the place. Do you know of any way in the world I can get him to stop drinking? Is there any kind of medicine I can get? It breaks my heart to think of leaving him and still I cannot go through life like this. I live in constant fear of him. If I should leave him, I would have to go in hiding, as I believe he would kill me.

We have two dear children, aged 1 and 3. I want to rear them properly. I hope that some kind soul who reads this letter will please donate some clothing for the children and me. I wear size 38 garments and size 5 shoes. I particularly need a coat and shoes. The babies need everything. If anyone has clothing too large for children their size, I could make them over. I cannot let my husband know I have written this, but I will appreciate your kindness in printing it as soon as possible. Best wishes to you. VIRGINIA MOTHER.

What to Do.

DEAR VIRGINIA MOTHER: Since you have failed to give your name or address, it would be impossible for me to forward donations of clothing for you and the children, even if such donations should be forthcoming. Also, how do you expect to receive such donations (supposing you had given your name and address) without giving your husband some explanation as to whence and how they came.

• • • •

If conditions in your household are so deplorable that you and the children are in actual want, and you live in constant fear of your husband's violence, it seems to me you should take your problem to the nearest social agency. There you will be properly advised as to how to safeguard your own and your children's interests.

• • • •

I know of no bottled medicine guaranteed to cure a man of the drink habit. Nor is there any other routine formula for reforming such a one. Under circumstances such as you describe, a wife seldom has more than two alternatives: the one, to continue living in sordid misery; the other, to gather her children to her bosom and flee to whatever refuge and safety her own family can provide. If conditions are such that you cannot continue living as you are, then you will have to leave, and secure a court order restraining your husband from molesting you.

• • • •

For information as to how to proceed, inquire of the Legal Aid Bureau, 1010 Vermont avenue, the Denrike Building, Washington, D. C. This bureau can tell you what agencies exist in the State of Virginia for protecting helpless women and children who find themselves in such a predicament as this. M. H.

Farmer's Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some weeks ago I wrote to you about my wife going to town to live and wanting me to give up my farm and look for a job there. My wife has found work and now asks me to join her. She says she has also found a job for me. I told her I would not care to come as I love the country and don't want to get rid of my farm and farming equipment. Since I told her that she has not asked me to come any more, and has been home only once in three months. She says she does not know when she will be down again. She does not write to me unless I write first.

• • • •

I have never gone out with any other woman, as I do not think that would be right, and also because I do not care for the company of other women. I love my wife and do not wish to raise any false hope in any other girl's heart. Do you think if I went with someone else it would help matters, or would it only make them worse? UNDECIDED FARMER.

• • • •

DEAR UNDECIDED FARMER: If you love your wife and don't enjoy the society of other women, no possible purpose could be served in becoming a squire of ladies now. In your first letter you told me your wife loved you, but simply couldn't stand country life. If she dislikes the country so intensely that even her love for you couldn't hold her there, it is extremely unlikely that jealousy of your presumable interest in other women would bring her back. If you went out with some other woman and told her about it she might be hurt, angry and resentful and the breach which already exists would only be widened.

• • • •

Since your wife made the first move in leaving, and you the second, in refusing to join her, it would appear that the next, the third, move is up to her. Now she can either come back in her own good time or she can ask for complete freedom. In time she will do one or the other without any urging from you. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Directoire Ruling.

Paris (U.P.).—The Directoire line seems to predominate this season and many flaring basques are noted on suit jackets as well as full-length coats. These full basques are frequently in fur to match the collars and cuffs. In some cases, the basques are detachable and can be used for shoulder capes as well.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Histadine Treatment of Peptic Ulcer.

Ulcers of the stomach and duodenum—due to the rush and bustle of modern life and taking insufficient time to thoroughly masticate our food—are still with us and probably will be for generations to come. They present an important health problem and the ideal treatment has not been evolved as yet. It is significant of progress, however, that new methods are constantly being tried—all directed toward restoring the normal physiology of the stomach.

Just what brings on a peptic ulcer is not clear although there are many factors such as infection, emotion, and fatigue. But back of the process lies a situation or habit of the body which paves the way for their formation. The lesions will appear, become active for a time, then quiet down only to recur at a later date.

Surgery has not been as successful as every one had hoped, for the reason that while the diseased tissue can be removed, leaving a clean functioning mucous membrane, the operation fails to correct the underlying condition. In all too many cases symptoms return with a new lesion in the vicinity of the original trouble. For the fundamental cause we must look not at the bit of stomach or duodenal wall that has been destroyed, but back into the patient's mode of life; at something that has weakened his reserve. In other words, healing will take place whenever the resistance of the patient is raised to such a point that the mucous lining will no longer suffer destruction.

Careful Nursing.

But let us suppose that an ulcer exists—what then? The accepted medical management includes rest in bed, careful nursing, and an appropriate nonirritating diet. In addition it is known that an excess amount of acid in the gastric juice is damaging. This has led to the use of alkalis for its complete neutralization. Neutral gastric mucin has in recent years proved to be of value as affording protection to the mucous membrane against the irritation of foods and of acid.

Inasmuch as these ulcers occur in the stomach or duodenum we have a right to assume that some failure in nutrition is responsible for their origin. Possibly some element has been lost by a group of living cells which allows the gastric juice to digest them. We know that if the stomach is normally supplied with blood certain compounds are secreted which prevent the digestive fluids from attacking the structure itself. One such is histadine. A short time ago Weiss and Aron suggested that the employment of this substance—injected into the muscles—would halt the further ravages of the disease.

Diagnosis Confirmed.

The plan consists of one injection each day for 24 days of a small amount of histadine monohydrochloride. No dietary restriction is enforced other than the avoidance of obviously irritating foods. The patient proceeds about his business during the treatment and is not confined to bed. In many of the experimental cases symptoms subsided rapidly and the pain usually disappeared or was greatly abated by the end of the fourth or fifth day.

A man aged 31 had complained of periodic attacks of stomach pain since 1930. X-ray studies confirmed the diagnosis and histadine therapy was begun. After the seventh injection there was some improvement and another X-ray showed that healing had begun. A second and third series were administered, subsequent to which Roentgen studies failed to disclose the slightest evidence of his former trouble. There has been no return of symptoms.

A man aged 65 with typical signs was found to have a deep crater in the stomach wall. In his case histadine injections were followed by relief although cure is not complete.

End Bad Letter-Writing

"JUST A PILE of rubbish" exclaims Polly, frowning at the heap of rumpled letters. She can't hit the right note in that letter to Dick. She's being stiff, literary.

In friendly letters it's so much better to write as you speak. Don't write "I deplore" for "I am sorry." Don't be afraid to write "I shouldn't" and "I won't" for "I should not," "I will not." Those contractions are correct except in formal letters.

Why write "I take a justifiable pride in having ascertained what ailed the radio." Write down your own lively speech: "Now I know how Edison felt when he invented the phonograph! All by myself I found out why our radio howled! The kitten clawed the ground wire off the radiator."

Here are some pointers:

For a thank-you letter, promptness is of prime importance.

Your own address and the date may stand at upper right on the first page, or at lower left after the signature in social letters.

A business letter must have a good attention-getting start and a strong ending.

Make your letters easy and gay with the help of our 40-page booklet, HOW TO WRITE LETTERS FOR ALL OCCASIONS. A clear guide to letter etiquette. Sample letters give you the "starter" you need.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, HOW TO WRITE LETTERS FOR ALL OCCASIONS, to The Washington Post Home Institute, 169 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS and the NAME of booklet.

D. C. Actress Made Her Mark Late in Life

By Hope Ridings Miller.

MORE than a score of years ago—at an age when most women are already established in their careers—a slim, dark-eyed woman bereft of her husband and with four children to support, decided to begin hers. She was going on the stage.

As liabilities—she had the responsibility of providing for her family, no professional experience, and more years than the average woman who elects a life behind the footlights.

As assets—she had ambition, some talent (as had been proved in her appearances in amateur theatricals) and an amazing capacity for hard work.

Today, that woman is regarded as one of the best character actresses in the contemporary theater. She is Adelaide Hibbard, who for ten consecutive years endeared herself to Washington audiences as a member of the National Theater Players, who was formerly associated with the Clifford Brooke Drama School, and who will this year be on the faculty of the National Academy of Stage Training.

Talks of Past.

Now a permanent resident of the Capital, this stately, silver-haired woman with an exceptional sense of humor, a rich voice and a superior faculty for expressing herself both on and off the stage, sat on an antique sofa in her home on S street, related some of the events that have made hers a heart-warming success story, and revealed incidentally her ideas on the modern theater; the current chances for stage-struck youth; the cultural and commercial value of voice training, and the necessity for an absorbing interest in the last half of life.

"Love of the theater is a heritage from my father," she began. "He was a professional reader and an amateur actor. He encouraged me to take part in theatricals as soon as I could talk."

When she was in her 'teens, he suggested that she attend the Emerson School of Oratory, "not because he wanted me to go on the stage—I don't believe he ever thought of that—but for purely cultural benefits," she said. Later, this course was to serve as a basis for her career; but in the meantime she married George Albee Hibbard, and settled down to domesticity and the social duties expected of the wife of the man who for many years was Boston's postmaster and later its mayor.

Husband Sympathetic.

Her husband was as sympathetic with her interest in the theater, however, as her father had been. So she found some time to take part in amateur productions, devoting the hours to this work that many matrons give to bridge or club activity.

She admits she obtained her first professional role chiefly because her late husband's name was familiar to the residents of Boston and the impressario of the stock company she joined saw the publicity that would accrue from having "Mrs. George Albee Hibbard" listed among his players. Her role, she said, was a minor one, "but no Broadway star was ever more thrilled than I on the night I negotiated it."

From then on her career was a series of triumphs, seasoned with laborious study and hard work. At first she was frequently given "second-woman parts" though her heart from the beginning was set on character roles. As a member of the stock company that played in New Britain, Conn., for four seasons, she dropped the "Mrs." from her stage name and became "Adelaide Hibbard." Playing one-night and one-week stands, filling numerous stock engagements, enacting Broadway roles and appearing in hits that made thrilling theatrical history, this woman, who went on the stage when some actresses are retiring from it, made her name mean something of importance in the theater from coast to coast.

This time a year ago she was studying the lines for the "mother" role in "The Constant Wife," which starred Ethel Barrymore and delighted audiences in the East and Middle West for many weeks.

Has Trained Many.

During the years when she was making a name for herself and later, when she could afford to spend some time resting on the laurel of her success, she has encouraged and trained numerous young men and women with stardust in their eyes, has given them the benefit of her extensive and varied experience. Convinced the legitimate stage "is now coming back into its own," she believes chances for theatrical success are much more numerous today than they have been in many years. She believes, further, that "dramatic training is as essential to the office-worker, the club-worker, the housewife and the mother as to the girl ambitious for a stage career."

Her own experience is proof that success is possible for the woman who begins her career comparatively late in life, and one of her pet theories is that "every woman at middle age and past must have an absorbing interest. Necessity forced me to the stage," she said, "and now I wonder what I would do if it hadn't. My son and my three daughters are grown and married. They have their own lives and interests. I have mine. I believe no woman facing the last half of life could ask more."

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"YOU TAKE such a lot of trouble to present fresh and charming ideas to your readers that I want to help you by telling you some of the things I've done that may be useful to somebody else," wrote one of our readers whom we don't know but wish we did.

"I'm living in an old house and the kitchen when we got it was that cold mutton gravy color that comes from years of smoke from a coal stove. But we've done it all over fresh, starting with a good scrubbing. Then we painted the woodwork in a French gray of a warm pinky tone. I have a large and most substantial home-made cabinet to hold glass, and below is a roomy compartment for dry groceries. This is painted French gray outside, and inside the shelves it is Chinese yellow . . . the chairs and frame of the table are the same. Over the table are two capacious shelves to hold the kitchen china, and as it happens they fit in the angle of a corner between two windows. Things so arrange themselves that I could paint the wall between the shelves Chinese yellow and the blue willow china stands out bravely against the gay wall. The linoleum floor is a checkered design in dull blue, gray and cream, so that the blue is repeated in the china, the gray woodwork recalls the gray and the yellow intensifies the cream color in the floor. The curtains are checked muslin in sash style, and the saucepans which hang in graduate sizes over the drainboard are aluminum. I've used yellow oilcloth where needed, too.

"Outside the house is white with window frames and frames of the glass porches in cranberry red, which is attractive in summer and cheerful in winter."

We love getting letters from readers telling of their adventures making pleasant homes!

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

THE SEASON'S crop of musical hopefuls is getting steamed up here, and the Town Hall, our popular concert-auditorium on Forty-third street, opposite the Henry Miller Theater, is getting scrubbed up for a busy year.

JANE COWL.

Most of the musical debutantes hurl themselves headlong at fate and the music critics from the stage of good old Town Hall. I learn that almost a hundred of these jittery and sometimes heart-breaking affairs are already booked for the new season.

A moderate-priced professional debut costs the aspiring musician (or her angel) about $700. This covers the rental of the hall, printing, the piano, window-cards, photographs, a bit of advertising and the agent's usual 10-per cent. I, for one, dread going to these sometimes ghoulish affairs. Outside of the artist's family and friends, all of whom can be recognized by their proud beams, most of those who attend look either bored or grim. And there is always the terrifying chance the newcomer will make an appalling mistake of some kind, through sheer nervous strain and a fit of the blind staggers.

• • • •

Prodigies always take the cold plunge at Town Hall, too. In October Laura Dubmann, 11, and Gloria Perkins, 13, both performers on the pianoforte, will make their public bows there. I am sorry to say I shall probably be called out of town those two evenings. A prodigy-debut is almost as tough on the audience as it is on the young artists!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I see Jane Cowl—dear old Janie—sweeping proudly through Forty-fifth street, and I am at last really convinced that autumn and the new show-season are in among us. Didn't get a chance to ask her whether she really and truly did bike through England! . . . Speaking of Janie, I yield to no one in my admiration for the Juliet of Norma Shearer, but I still maintain that the loveliest and best Juliet of our era was La Cowl's, a decade or so ago. And at the risk of imprisonment for treason, I must say that Rollo Peters' Romeo in the same production was 10 times the job that Leslie Howard turned in. I still feel that Les, in the confusion of the great production, thought that he was cast for Hamlet . . . • • • •

The pretty Eleanor Holm Jarrett, as soon as she got back from the Olympics, at which she was a newspaper woman and not a swimmer, shopped on smart Fifty-seventh street for a smart stage and screen wardrobe. Her new togs show something of a military influence and were designed, naturally, for the "athletic beauty" type of girl.

Edith Maxwell's Release Sought Till New Trial

Attorney Will Seek to Have Girl Bailed Pending Second Hearing.

An attempt probably will be made next week to obtain the release of Edith Maxwell on bail pending her second trial for the murder of her father, Trigg Maxwell, it was announced last night following a conference at Alexandria, Va., between Charles Henry Smith, a defense attorney, and Earl Maxwell, brother of the Virginia mountain school teacher.

Edith, who was granted a second trial Friday when the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals set aside her conviction and 25-year sentence, is at the jail in Jonesville, Va. She has been in a jail cell since July of last year.

Smith, who gave his services to Edith's defense at the request of The Post, which raised more than $1,000 in voluntary gifts from its subscribers, will go before Judge H. A. W. Skeen, of the Wise County Circuit Court, and ask that the 22-year-old girl be released on bond.

Later on application will be made to Judge Skeen, who sentenced Edith to 25 years in prison, for a change of venue on the ground that she cannot get a fair trial in Wise County.

Earl Maxwell, who has taken a major part in Edith's defense, expressed jubilation over the verdict of the appeals court, and hopes her second trial will bring exoneration.

Accused Bigamist Held Under Bond

Raymond Donaldson, of Bradbury Heights, Md., was ordered held under $2,500 bond for the grand jury yesterday when he pleaded guilty to a bigamy charge in Police Court.

Donaldson was arrested by Detective Sergt. Louis Wilson, of the Ninth Precinct, on a warrant issued by the District Attorney's office after the complaint of Louise Donaldson, of 817 Fourth street northeast.

In a statement filed before Judge Isaac R. Hitt, Donaldson is accused of having married Bernice Eaton in June, 1936, while he was still married to Louise. Louise told the court she had married Donaldson in June, 1934.

John Gilbert's Huge Bed Is Purchased for Hotel

Beverly Hills, Sept. 16 (AP).—The Paul Curtis Galleries, which conducted the recent Los Angeles auction of the late John Gilbert's personal property, today said the actor's huge ivory bed and other furniture sufficient to outfit a large room were being shipped to a mountain resort hotel near Uniontown, Pa.

Purchase of the bed for $1,250 was announced previously by Leo Heyn, the hotel manager. Heyn said he expected to furnish a room that would be "an attraction for American honeymooners," and call it the "John Gilbert honeymoon" room. The bed is 7½ feet wide—easily accommodating four pillows in a row—and 6½ feet long.

CHAPTER XVII.
Works for Law Firm.

"Where is Ellen working, David?" Pamella asked.

"At the fusiest old law firm you ever saw. Worn leather chairs all in a row. Miles of tan and red books. Crowds of elderly female secretaries. And young Ellen in the midst of all this antiquity, looking like a lovely little bronzy chicken just popped out of the egg. How she stands it! And, of course, the oldest boy in the bunch has her constantly at his elbow with her little pad. Mr. Gordon Geddes."

"Why, he was a friend of father's. If Ellen works for him, she's got a job she—and her unemployed friends—can be proud of."

"Well, she does, and her friend's got employment. I'm going to stack that load of firewood you had hauled in yesterday."

"Be careful and don't hurt your hands. Mr. Geddes may have already taken pity on the poor little stenographer and given her a treat at his place down in Oak Knoll. If he has, what I have to offer will seem pretty tame."

"Not if Mr. Mallard can be pried loose from his rest cure," said David, tiptoeing elaborately across the room and out the door to show that he didn't wish to disturb anybody.

Pam went into the library rather thoughtfully. She sat down at her fathers handsome carved walnut desk, and with many pauses to stare out the window, wrote a little note. Presently, she called Ruben.

"Please take this up to Mr. Mallard."

Ruben's black face fell.

Mal's talisman reared its magnificent beauty from a clear glass bud vase on his dresser. He looked at it now and then as he stood before the mirror, knotting a pale yellow tie neatly striped with cherry. He was wearing cocoa-brown flannels, a lemon-colored sweater under his belted jacket. The tie tucked down in the sweater V struck him as the proper adornment with which to celebrate such a glorious, golden morning.

Only Ruben at Door.

He saw Ito cross the room hurriedly to answer a knock. Mal whirled about to face the door on two unsteady legs which the increased pounding of his heart didn't strengthen any. The open door, however, revealed only Ruben, grave and impressive.

"Isn't she coming?" Mal called out in a sudden gush of disappointment.

Ruben came into the room and handed Mal a note.

"I'll come up to see you only on one condition," was written firmly across the page of a double sheet of gray note paper. "That you promise on your word of honor you'll never ever—say the things you think you ought to say about being taken ill in my home. Such apologies would make me miserable—as if I'd failed you as a friend and a hostess."

Mal's first impulse was to dash downstairs and give his promise by word of mouth. But his bath and his dressing had left him rather tottery, and he couldn't bear to stagger back to her across the living room in much the same way as he could dimly remember, he had lef her.

He tore off the page containing her message and put it in his pocket. Then, borrowing a pencil from Ruben, he wrote across the blank page that remained.

"You haven't failed me! I'll promise anything on what few scraps of honor left me, if I may only see you at once."

Mal went out on his balcony and leaned on the railing between two tubbed white azaleas and looked down over the garden. It seemed to him a perfect Italian arrangement. Transverse terraces cut across the hill and two long lines of magnificent Irish yews flanked a broad walk which descended the terraces in shallow steps to end finally at a graceful circular fountain far below. The tangled beds on the terraces cried out for flowers. All the trees and shrubs needed trimming. There was a great deal to do.

And then she came and caught him unaware in spite of his efforts while he was again looking down at the garden.

He turned quickly, feeling sure that she had spoken. She stood in the balcony door, looking at him. She seemed far more lovely than he remembered her, in the clear morning sunlight and in the simple white wool dress she was wearing, a big purple pansy caught in a button loop at her throat. Her hair shone like silver. It appeared to him that the radiance in her face had lately been disturbed by some sudden thought, just passed. But she was smiling; her eyes a trifle wet, as if dimmed for a moment with a mist of shocked understanding. He wondered how long she'd been standing there . . .

Expresses Sorrow.

He came toward her in two or three eager strides.

"I'm so sorry! Mooning here deep in your garden's beauty, I'm tardy in greeting deeper beauty." He caught up both her hands.

"Look me in the eye."

This was an unnecessary command since he had never been given a more direct gaze than was now lifted bluely to his.

"Do you really wish me to stay here?"

"Yes, I do . . . That is, if you really wish to stay."

"God—how I want to!"

"Then stay."

Miss Ellen Greet was shamelessly taking the firm's time to compose a private letter. Beneath a legal beginning: "The party of the first part (hereinafter designated as the San Gabriel Water & Improvement Co.)" she had written: "Dear Mr. Mallard."

"Please don't think because I'm writing you," Ellen clicked away on the typewriter, intending to copy the letter on her best paper and in her most dashing chirography later, "that I'm trying to intrude upon your rest and privacy. Frankly, through David Barkley, I know where you're staying, but hasten to assure you that I'm guarding this confidence.

"I simply can't bear to have you think I walked out on you New Year's Eve. Especially after your kindness in wanting to meet me, I was never so thrilled! It was all Mr. Barkley's fault. And was I furious!

"I am sending you a book of my favorite poems, hoping you may enjoy glancing through them.

"With kindest wishes and hopes that you will take good care of yourself, I am yours most gratefully and admiringly . . ."

Having read it over, she approved of it. And that part about the poems was simply inspired. She had gone into Pasadena's leading book shop and asked a solicitous young gentleman wearing spectacles if he would kindly recommend a book of poems as a gift for a mature and literary friend. The young man seemed to sense at once that the friend was of the masculine persuasion. He thought the new edition of Francis Thompson's "Selected Poems" might be suitable.

Ellen had never heard of Francis Thompson. But she liked the big-eyed portrait of him, age 19, in the front of the book, whose neat format of raspberry colored linen, embellished with golden laurel leaves, was just slender and small enough to slip handily into a well-tailored tweed coat pocket.

Restraining a desire to write on the flyleaf, she modestly inserted her card, and asked the salesman to wrap the book for mailing.

3 Admit Robberies; $100,000 Bond Set

Three men pleaded guilty to two robberies yesterday when arraigned in Police Court and their total bond was set at $100,000.

The men, Fred White, 30, and Bruce C. Lawrence, 24, both of Takoma Park, Md., and Howard M. Price, 23, of the 1900 block Fourth street northeast, were arrested by Detective Sergt. Thomas Nally after the tag numbers of their car were traced by a citizen.

The two hold-ups attributed to the men amounted to $75 and $2.04.

Price pleaded guilty to two hold-ups and his bond was set at $25,000 in each case. The others were held on $25,000 bail on one charge each.

Fund Started For Orphans Of Auto Crash

Mrs. Trowbridge Sends $5 to Post 'for Gallant Grandmother' of 6 Children.

A gray-haired grandmother sat in the doorway of a dingy, first-floor flat at 1301 Fourth street northwest, yesterday and watched five youngsters playing on the brick sidewalk.

"This is no place to bring up young 'uns," she said. "They need fresh air and green grass—and that's what I aim to give them."

The grandmother was Mrs. Irene Corley, of Mount Holly, N. C. The youngsters were her grandchildren, orphaned by a traffic crash near Fredericksburg, Va., Saturday.

The children's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Tompkinson, were buried Tuesday near the accident scene and Mrs. Corley has undertaken the task of raising the orphans on her small farm in North Carolina.

But financial difficulties have intervened to prevent transportation of the youngsters to her home. Tompkinson left an estate of $6—and this went to the hospital where he died.

Kindly friends and neighbors have contributed small sums and food to help the children until arrangements are completed for the trip to North Carolina.

And a "grandmother's fund" was started yesterday by Mrs. Gertrude Trowbridge, of the Dodge Hotel. She gave $5 to The Post as a contribution for "Mrs. Corley, a gallant grandmother." The money, together with other donations, will be turned over to Mrs. Corley for her return to the North Carolina farm with the children.

One of the orphaned youngsters is already in Mount Holly. The others, cramped in small quarters of the Fourth street house, range in age from 3 to 12.

Suspect Is Arrested In Kidnaping of Baby

Detroit, Sept. 16 (AP).—Richard Liska, 44, who police said had a criminal record, was taken into custody late today for questioning concerning the disappearance of 20-month-old Harry Browe September 5.

Acting chief of detectives William J. Collins said police had been seeking Liska ever since the child vanished from his perambulator in Clark Park. Collins said the man had been ordered away from the park several times on suspicion of molesting children.

The officers planned to confront Liska with the brothers of the Browe baby, Charles, 9, and Edward, 7, who had wheeled him to the park and then left him while they went to a confectionery.

Dozen Killed by Crash.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Samuel Lubell.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 16.—With Col. Charles I. Stengle overwhelmingly elected on the first ballot the convention banquet last night became a "victory" ball.

An air of satisfaction hung over the speaker's platform where the members of the executive council who had patched up their differences to stave off a Babcock reelection boom, sat with their guests.

If all was not right with the work of the field liberals and left wing delegates from the District they took their defeat gamely and managed to make the most of the food, orchestra and dance floor.

"At any rate we got more votes than last year," remarked Henry Rhine, of Works Progress Administration, with a weak smile.

Henry C. Iler, of Internal revenue, led a "next convention to Philadelphia" march around the ballroom floor. He appeared not to see the "Chicago invites you next" banner hung up at one end of the ballroom.

While the meal was being served George Warren, of Interior Lodge, circulated among the tables, as usual, bubbling over with funny stories.

We didn't stay very long after the dancing started, but some of the couples we saw on the floor were Mrs. Bernice B. Heffner, national secretary, and James Badabaugh, of Agriculture; Elaine Couper and Louis Levine, of Social Security; Ira Y. Bain and Mrs. Irene C. Gantt, of Internal Revenue, who was the tall, beautiful creature in pink dancing with Edward McGinnis of the Adjutant General's Office.

Contrary to advance rumors, the Civil Service Commission Lodge delegation accorded a courtesy presidential nomination to R. R. Stratton, as the lodge had instructed. When the first count of Stengle's vote was announced, the lodge switched its vote.

Col. Stengle "passed" the proxy vote he holds for Lodge No. 66 on the presidency.

Recall Battle.

The peace and harmony predicted by Col. Stengle in his acceptance speech disappeared quickly soon after the delegates reconvened for this morning's session.

When James G. Yaden, president of the District Department, rose to read the report of the constitutional committee, the conservative machine went into action. On the first amendments there was no opposition, the liberals and so-called "New Deal" group realizing the futility of raising objections.

However, when the question came up of dropping the article calling for recall and referendum machinery, the battle royal started.

The vote of the District lodges on the crucial question of whether or not the recall machinery should be dropped was as follows:

Against recall, Navy, Adjutant General's Office, National Bureau of Standards, through proxy, General Accounting Office, Public Buildings and Public Parks, War Finance, Library of Congress, Weather Bureau, Post Office Department, St. Elizabeths No. 28 and 98, the latter, through proxy, Engraving and Printing, Civil Service Commission, Tariff, Compensation, Public Health, Internal Revenue, District of Columbia, Navy Yard, Mt. Alto Veterans Hospital, District Jail, AAA, Internal Revenue Field Agents, National Capitol Parks, General Land Office, National Training School for Boys, National Zoo, through proxy, Government Printing Office, Elevator Operators and Internal Revenue No. 230.

For recall—Veterans, Translators, through proxy, Interdepartment Treasury, Agriculture, Interstate Commerce Commission, State, Works Progress Alministration and Resettlement.

Labor No. 224 voted one vote yes and one vote no, while Interior and Superintendent of Documents delegates weren't present.

While the tellers were tallying up the roll-call results Arthur Stein, president of Works Progress Administration lodge paced the side aisle. In other camp Michael D. Schafer of the Navy chatted nervously with newspapermen and the official stenographer.

While Yaden was reading the various amendments restricting the power of the president and expanding that of the executive council, former President E. Claude Babcock strolled about the convention floor telling friends "I resigned $6,000 but nothing else."

Yaden's voice boomed so loudly that John R. W. Smith, of New York, himself no whisperer, requested that Yaden not use the microphone.

School Children To Watch G. A. R. Give Final Parade

A generation which has no grandfathers' knees on which to sit and hear tales of Gettysburg, Antietam, the Wilderness and Malvern Hill, will have a day from school to see an enfeebled band—the once glorious Grand Army of the Republic—parade on Wednesday.

This was voted yesterday by the Board of Education, over protests of Superintendent of School Frank W. Ballou.

"If I thought 20 per cent of the pupils when excused, would attend the review, I wouldn't object," Ballou said. "My guess is that not more than 10 per cent will go."

George W. Offutt, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, made the request for the closing of school Wednesday. He said the parade would be "a replica of the last grand review of the G. A. R. by President Lincoln" just after the war.

"We closed the schools for the Shriners' parade," said Henry Gilligan board member. "I think we could do it for this, which will probably be the last in which the G. A. R. will march."

School Board In Deadlock Over Pay Rise

Calls Special Meeting for Today to Act on Salary Dispute.

Holiday Voted for Next Wednesday; Two New Posts Created.

The question of salary advances for 86 teachers in public vocational schools, which this year are raised to junior high school level, provided an impasse for the Board of Education when it met yesterday to complete plans for opening the school term next Monday.

Locked in a dispute over the salary status of these instructors, board members refused to approve or reject Supt. Frank W. Ballou's recommendation that only those teachers who can qualify on the junior high school level be given pay raises this fall.

In the hope of settling the long-argued problem before the teachers take their oath of office tomorrow, the board voted a special meeting for this afternoon, a preliminary to which shall be a meeting of Henry Gilligan's special committee on vocational education. This resolution followed a heated exchange of remarks between Gilligan, who wants all the vocational teachers blanketed in the advanced salary scale, and Dr. Ballou.

Holiday Is Voted.

Although unable to dispose of this question, the board did act on several other matters affecting the new school term:

It voted a holiday for next Wednesday, the third day of school, to permit pupils to witness the G. A. R. encampment grand review down Pennsylvania avenue.

It appointed two assistant principals, Mrs. E. S. Phillips, Central High School teacher, was named to the assistant principalship at Woodrow Wilson High School, and Mrs. J. N. Tate, Cardozo High School teacher to the post of assistant principal of that school. Both are new positions.

It approved extension of the supervised study experiment at Anacostia Junior and Senior High School. The experiment, begun last spring, was designed to eliminate home study for pupils.

Economy Is Urged.

It heards a communication from Maj. D. J. Donovan, District auditor, calling upon the school authorities to stay within the appropriations allotted for the transportation of physically handicapped children. This means that 22 children living in remote sections cannot be carried to school, Dr. Ballou announced.

It approved the discontinuance of certain school units in the area of the new Bundy School for colored children, and voted establishment of other new classifications.

The debate over the vocational salary question began in a preliminary meeting of the vocational education committee, and arose again in the general meeting when Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, board president, called on Gilligan, chairman of the committee, for his report.

The question is the outgrowth of new legislation which was passed by Congress last April 10. It advanced all trade and vocational schools from the elementary class for the junior high school level. It set up salary schedules, one providing for pay at the elementary level, on which the teachers have been working; another on the junior high level, and authorized the board of education to fix the policy of salary payment. The difference in the salary levels averages approximately $100 a year for each teacher.

Urges Blanketing.

The Teachers' Union, which has a heavy membership among the vocational teacher personnel, immediately pressed the board to blanket all the teachers into the advanced salary scale. It did so with the support of the Central Labor Union. Dr. Ballou from the beginning has taken a firm stand against such blanketing.

At the same time he pointed out he believed most of the teachers would classify as junior high school teachers and be wholly entitled to the pay raise, and yesterday he told the board he had a report ready in which he recommended 80 per cent of the instructors for advanced standing.

Ballou submitted his report recommending the advancement of the "80 per cent" for the teachers (about 70), but withdrew it when Gilligan agreed to withdraw a previous report in which he had recommended a blanket raise.

John H. Wilson, a member of Gilligan's committee, had refused to sign the report, and George Whitwell, the other member, who is out of town, has not participated in the discussion.

Gas Firms' Sale To D. C. Utility Is Topic Today

Whether the Washington Gas Light Co. will be authorized to acquire the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Co. of Hyattsville will be discussed today at a conference between the Public Utilities Commission and officials of the gas company.

While the utility has not filed formal application for permission to make the purchase, the issue was raised recently when the Washington and Suburban companies registered 130,000 shares of Washington Gas Light Co. stock with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

As the Alexandria and Hyattsville companies also are owned by the Washington and Suburban companies, it is expected they will likewise be placed on the market.

The commission must approve any such deal before it can be effected, however, under provisions of the public utility law. While the District agency would have no direct control over the consumer rates of these two subsidiaries, were they acquired, it would be concerned with the effect of the purchase and operation on the local utility's revenue.

Approval of the deal probably would hinge upon the price asked for the two suburban companies. No figure has been mentioned publicly.

The commission and William A. Roberts, people's counsel, are watching the proposed sale of the controlling stock in the Washington gas company because of past efforts to end domination of the local utility by out-of-town investors.

2 Seized in Liquor And Numbers Raid

Vice squad police seized two men yesterday afternoon—one for allegedly writing "numbers," the other for selling illicit liquor.

Entering a taxicab office at 1551 Ninth street northwest, the police arrested Lucky Cefus Young, colored, 32, of the Ninth street address. A quantity of alleged "numbers" slips was seized. Young was charged with operating a lottery.

In the second raid, Norman Bryant, colored, of 1515 Ninth street northwest, was charged with the sale and keeping for sale of untaxed whisky. He was arrested in his home, where police found several jars of alleged "high moon." Bryant's home was raided on a United States Commissioner's warrant.

One Federal Division Enrolled 100% for Red Cross Roll Call

Although the scheduled campaign is still two weeks distant, one of the 425 Red Cross Government divisions already has enrolled its entire personnel 100 per cent in the 1936 roll call.

The announcement was made last night by Capt. H. A. Gardyne, vice chairman of the Government Red Cross unit, in a meeting of the roll call committee, of which Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., is chairman. Capt. Gardyne was reporting for Gen. Fred Boschen, at the head of Red Cross enrollment in the Federal and District governments.

Wilson said last night that practically all the roll call organization is complete. The campaign will get under way officially on September 27.

The name of the division already pledged to meet its quota was not made public by Gardyne. This division, he said, however, distributed its supplies and completed its enrollment immediately.

Red Cross workers last night said after headquarters at 1416 H street northwest had closed there was a timid knock at the door. They found a woman standing in the darkness.

"I saw your sign," she said, "and since I expect to give my membership eventually, I'd like to join the Red Cross right away. I'd be glad to help with your drive, if there's anything in the world I can do."

She promptly was enrolled and given her button.

Roosevelt Extends Greetings, Wishes for Happiness and Prosperity; Dr. Adler Strikes Keynote of Period With Praise for Constitution.

As venerable rabbis chanted and cantors sang the melancholy sacred songs of the Jews of old, Washington Hebrew joined their brethren the world over in celebrating last night at sundown the arrival of the new year, the 5697th in the Jewish calendar.

On the occasion of the new year, President Roosevelt from the White House extended greetings and wishes for health and prosperity. He said:

"Mindful of the signal part taken by the Jewish people of America in upholding the traditions and aims of our country, it gives me special pleasure to extend cordial greetings to all those of Jewish faith on this Rosh Hashana. I trust that the new year will bring to our fellow Jewish citizens great prosperity and happiness."

As the last rays of sunset filtered through the sky, a score of rams' horns were sounded by rabbis throughout the Capital in the symbolic ceremony marking the ten days of penitence known as Asereth Yemay Teshuvah.

The holidays are scattered throughout the next month, concluding four weeks from today. Friday and the day after of this week are known as the Day of Atonement and the fasting for 24 hours then is the ritual of Yom Kippur. On October 1 and 2 follow two other holidays, while the last days of the period are October 7 and 8.

While many of the bearded and capped rabbis will content themselves with sermons on ancient customs, some will attack present-day social problems, some based on the coincidence of today being Constitution Day.

Adler Strikes Keynote.

A keynote for this type of sermon was struck by Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, when he said:

"In any year, as Americans and as Jews we rejoice in Constitution Day. In an age when tolerance was rare, and Jews, particularly, did not enjoy the privileges accorded to other people, this great document established forever the principle that 'No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust.' As we pray for the well-being of America, let us give thanks for the charter of liberty adopted on this day 148 years ago."

Rabbi Stephen Wise in his annual message said:

"On the eve of the year 5696 the hideously unjust Nuremburg laws were enacted, and as the year passes into the shadows, the existence of Jews in Spain, Spanish Morocco and Algiers is imperiled."

Rabbi Z. Green will preach in Washington at the Chev Sholom Congregation on "Civilization at the Crossroads" and "Israel Imperiled," during the day today between 7 a. m. and 2 p. m.

Simon Preaches.

Dr. Abram Simon preached last night at the Washington Hebrew Congregation on "The Nature of Things," and at 10:30 a. m. today Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld will speak on "Religious Perspective."

Today at 10:30 a. m. at the Southern Hebrew Congregation, Rabbi J. T. Loeb speaks on "The True Meaning of Social Justice," a sermon which is to be followed at the same hour tomorrow with "A Message Divine."

Rabbi Harry Silverstone will speak this morning on "The Preservation of Israel" and tomorrow on "Our Duty" at the Tifereth Synagogue.

In olden times the festival of Rosh Hashana marked the beginning of the agricultural new year in Palestine. With the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem and the scattering of the people, new customs of worship grew up.

Instead of sacrifices on the altar the holiday has come to mean a time of prayer and meditation. This concept of the holiday comes from the rabbinical tradition that the new year commemorates the beginning of creation. Based upon Scriptural passages, it has become the judgment day of the Jewish year, the day upon which all people of the world pass before their Creator in judgment.

Justice to Jew Called Keynote Of Observance

By Rabbi J. T. Loeb,

Southeast Hebrew Congregation.

A universal idea is embodied in this Israel's New Year feast. A treasure of lessons applicable to the whole of the human kind. It is a birthday of creation (5697—after a given date in Bible chronology); not an event of human making or establishment. Likewise, it is a day of memorial (Yom-Haziccoron), calling to memory the wonderful handiwork of God within creation and His immutable law by which all things in Heaven and on earth are governed and preserved.

By aid of memory, reason, imagination, the three qualities of mind, we have a true perspective of the grandeur and glory of this vast universe, with the starry hosts of Heaven hung in space and kept in their due courses by a mysterious master hand, which is equally manifest by its divine guidance over this earthly sphere upon which we live and move and have our being.

In the day's sacred ritual, called "Zichronoth," our mind reverts back to the earthly scene of men and events in the annals of history and destiny of nations.

Admonition of Moses.

And thus the solemn admonition of Moses, the man of God:

"Remember the days of old; give heed unto the years of many generations; ask thy father, and he will tell thee; thy elders, and they will declare unto thee: When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance; when He separated the children of men, He set the borders of the peoples according to the number of the children of Israel."

Herein the destiny of Israel among the nations is reflected as in a mirror. And when it is to be considered, that this was spoken no less than 33 centuries ago, who could gainsay the divine plan and purpose in the life of this people? And who could assign any natural causes to their wanderings and dispersion?

The Jew stands alone amid the nations of the earth in celebrating a Memorial Day of Creation; as he stands alone in propagating the ideal thought of all-embracing righteousness under an All-One Fatherhood of God. Standing midway between the various groups and races of man—a potent agency in the upbuilding of nations and states, the Jew is thus bound to be internationally minded; as he is divinely ordained for the obvious purpose of bringing about friendly relations among the families of the earth: trading intercourse; interchange of opinion; a mutual understanding and appreciation of each other's character; regardless of geographical lines and barriers between nations and states.

Function of the Jew.

This is the function of the Jew; no more nor less than a reflex of the nations round about. And when the world will finally have accorded justice to the Jew, it will mean justice to all the children of man, with no discrimination as to race or creed.

Justice is the keynote in the observance of the holy day and season beginning Israel's New Year.

As we scan the annals of history of the past, we are saddened to note it pages filled with blood and tears through the perversion of justice, and the penalty meted out in consequence of human misdeeds.

With shocking force the scene of horror is re-enacted in world history today. The world bent down by the weight of its iniquity is held in the grip of two enemy forces; fiends incarnate from the nethers of Sheol, come to torment and torture a sinful and suffering humanity. Fascism and communism. God save America and the world from both.

Costs to City Of Deficient Called Heavy

Others Unable to Meet Competition, Require Community's Aid.

By Ed Fenton.

Everybody has heard the story about the boy who couldn't get out of the second grade until the schoolhouse burned down. Most people think it's a joke.

But it's no joke to Dr. James Lewald, superintendent of the District Training School at Laurel, Md. He recognizes the tragic cost of mental deficiency in scorn, suffering and failure.

He recognizes, too, the financial burden that the mentally deficient hang on the community. And he knows that the only way to lessen that burden is through proper training.

Dr. Lewald estimates that of 10,000 mentally deficient in the District, 1,000 are in definite need of treatment at the District Training School.

"The persons in this group," he said, "are bound to fail as individuals. They will eventually have to be supported by the District because, inevitably, they will end up on the relief rolls, in jail or in almshouses. Without training they cannot adjust themselves to the complexities of modern life."

Appropriations Low.

Today, with a 40-year history of training schools for the mentally deficient behind us, it might seem pointless to argue their necessity. But Congress has apparently failed to understand this serious local problem and the training school has become a District stepchild, fighting to carry on its work with the most meager appropriations.

"Every no wand then," says Dr. Lewald, "I hear someone say that the mentally deficient should not be committed to institutions; that they, like everyone else, are guarantee dthe right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The only answer to that argument is 'look at the record.'

"In the community the mental defective is meeting those who cannot adjust themselves to his intelligence. He is made the dupe of his fellows. He is constantly unhappy.

"He finds himself unable to come up to the school standards. Year after year he remains in the same grade. Eventually he becomes a truant.

"Seeking to offset his deficiencies in other respects he may take to petty crime as a compensation. Sometimes his auto stealing or shop lifting may be his own idea. More often he is the prey of the unscrupulous.

"In the end, this type of boy lands in jail and the community not only has to pay for his support but also has to pay for his crime.

"Should the mental defective attempt to find an honest job he is, once more, at a dead end. He cannot meet competition in any field. He goes on the relief rolls or to the almshouse. And so again it is the community that must pay for his support.

Are Happier at School.

The problem is further complicated, Dr. Lewald says, by the tendency of the mentally defective to raise large families. Since the children of subnormal parents are almost certain to be subnormal, they form an additional burden to the taxpayers.

There is only one remedy for the situation, he says, the mentally defective must be institutionalized.

"Those sent to the training school are happier almost at once. They are mingling with those who can understand them and are freed from the attempt at competition they cannot meet," says Dr. Lewald.

"The younger ones, if educable, are sent to school. If too old for school they are put to work here in the institution, in the laundry, the power plant or on the farm. We attempt character education with all of them.

"Some of them, of course, can never be released. But after training here, many can be made fit to return to community life. They will have to be supervised but they can return and room can be made for others in desperate need of trianing.

"If we could have facilities here to take care of all the mentally defective who should be here, the ultimate cost to the District would be greatly reduced."

The woman was arraigned in court yesterday, but a hearing was continued until today because the arresting officer was not notified of the trial date.

Miss Passagno, accused of violating a District parking regulation, was taken to court by Traffic Policeman William Sparks after her father allegedly threatened to have the case dismissed because he was "a personal friend of the judge."

A charge of disorderly conduct against her was dismissed when she denied calling the policeman "a fool" and a few minutes later the traffic count was nolle prossed by the judge's order.

Meanwhile, one driving permit was revoked and 24 others suspended for periods of 15 to 45 days because of speeding by the revocations board, yesterday.

Work Is Sped on Tracks In Front of White House

The Capital Transit Co. is placing extra shifts on the job of rehabilitating the street car tracks on Pennsylvania avenue in front of the White House, the Public Utilities Commission was informed yesterday, so that the thoroughfare will be available for the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic on September 23.

The original plans did not call for completion of the work until October 5. At the request of the District Highway Department, the transit company has increased the number of workmen on the project and put on night shifts in order that the Avenue will be in order by the night of September 22.

D. C. Churches' Civic Committee To Talk With Hepbron on Crime

Additional plans to combat Washington's crime problem are expected to be discussed today when James M. Hepbron, acting director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, meets with members of the civic affairs committee of the Washington Federation of Churches.

In a recent letter signed by Wilbur LaRoe, jr., member of the District Parole Board and chairman of the federation committee, Hepbron was told of "appalling" crime conditions here. The federation cited inadequate facilities in both law enforcement and judicial branches of the District Government and urged Hepbron to include these points in his investigation.

Returning from a bref visit to Baltimore, where he is head of the Criminal Justice Commission, Hepbron yesterday prepared to continue his fact-finding inquiry by searching police records and conferring with authorities.

LaRoe told Hepbron the parole board staff is ready and willing to co-operate with the criminal justice group in its battle to control Washington crime. Conditions at local penal institutions, LaRoe said, make it a difficult problem to administer parole laws. The local police and probation systems are included in Hepbron's study.

Preliminary results of his findings, after an inquiry covering several months, will soon be ready for public release, Hepbron said. He is scheduled to speak before various civic, business and church groups during the next few weeks.

With J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Hepbron will be a guest speaker before the Washington Board of Trade later in the month.

Street Urges $2,300,000 Jobless Fund

Welfare Director Asks Big Boost at Closed Budget Hearing.

Commissioners Silent on Move for Added $700,000.

Public Welfare Director Elwood Street yesterday made a plea for $2,300,000 to relieve unemployment in 1938 at the close of an all-day closed budget hearing before the District Commissioners.

Accompanied by Miss Alice Hill, administrator of the Public Assistance Division, Street produced evidence to substantiate the request for an increase of $700,000 above the current appropriation. After the hearing the Commissioners were noncommital regarding the request.

Street disclosed later that he also plans to propose a deficiency appropriation of $500,000, when the Board of Public Welfare meets the latter part of this month, to care for the 3,000 destitute families now barred both from direct relief and WPA projects.

The welfare director has made several public appeals over the radio to Washingtonians to urge an appropriation of $1,000,000 by the next Congress. He explained yesterday that the $1,000,000 was the estimated cost for a year, and that half that amount would be urged to complete the fiscal year after Congress convenes.

Other welfare agency administrators made appeals for large increases asked in their estimates, including a request for 465 additional employes to place all employes of the department on standard hours recommended by the Civil Service Commission.

The welfare department has asked $11,381,000, or 40 per cent more money for 1938, than they were given by Congress for the present year.

Today the commissioners will take up the health and fire department estimates. The proposed public health centers, which would cost $500,000, are expected to be the focal issue.

While the District Medical Society went on record at a public hearing last week as opposed to the centers, it is understood that the executive committee will hear Health Officer George C. Ruhland later this week and may modify its position.

PWA Makes Grant For Repairing Jobs

Widening and paving of four streets adjacent to the new Interior Department Building will be effected this fall as the result of a PWA grant approved late yesterday.

While the exact amount was not known at the District Building, the understanding was that the grant was to constitute 45 per cent of an estimated $95,000 cost. The District will bear the 55 per cent.

The program calls for the widening and repaving of Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets between C and E streets and the north and south sections of E street between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets.

Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets will be widened to 56 feet, or about 20 feet broader than at present.

"The General Died at Dawn"—Palace. Transcribed to the screen by Clifford Odets, Broadway's most conspicuous "leftist" playwright, boasting a symphonic score by the talented Werner Janssen and starring Gary Cooper in another of his virile roles, this attraction will make the exciting corner of Thirteenth and F streets even more exciting the week beginning tomorrow. As "Lucky" OHara, Cooper is a devil-may-care American who has pledged himself to rid China of the curse of Gen. Yang, bandit chieftain, played by Akim Tamiroff. He is betrayed into the merciless cut throat's hands by the girl he loves (Madeleine Carroll). Dudley Digges, Porter Hall, and William Frawley head the supporting cast. News events, an "Our Gang" comedy and a cartoon complete the program.

"Nine Days a Queen"—Earle. Nova Pilbeam, now a grownup little English lady of 16 summers, and Cedric Hardwicke delineate the chief roles in this Gaumont-British production which has been hailed as one of the year's greatest films. The former is Lady Jane Grey, whose nine-day rule of England ends with her execution, and Sir Cedric (he was knighted by the late King George V but prefers to drop the "sir" in pictures) is the baleful Earl of Warwicke whose plottings subsequent to the death of Henry VIII result in the girl's ill-fated enthronement. Young Desmond Tester, John Mills, Frank Cellier, Sybil Thorndike and others are among the supporting players. The Earle's new show, which opens tomorrow, marks the return of stage presentations after a one-week lapse occasioned by the length of "Anthony Adverse." "Cuban Follies," an elaborate revue with 35 entertainers, presents the rhumba-playing Rimacs, Tito Coral, Don Zelaya & Co. and 16 South American beauties.

"The Road to Glory"—Loew's Capitol. A war drama, with Fredric March, Warner Baxter and Lionel Barrymore as French soldiers and June Lang as a nurse whom March and Baxter love, together with a vaudeville bill rich in variety constitute the program which Manager Gene Ford has welded together to celebrate his theater's ninth birthday anniversary. A dramatic argument against war, the picture's heavier side is relieved by Gregory Ratoff's accented comedy and a novel piano serenade scene in which March introduces himself to Miss Lang. The stage offering is composed of Florence and Alvarez, ballroom dancers; Duval, the French magician; Red Donahue and his mule; Stuart and Martin, and new routines by the Elida Ballet, which is being held over. A Phil Lampkin overture, newsreel and a cartoon comedy round out the program.

"Swing Time" — RKO Keith's (third week).—Their dancing more captivating than ever before, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers keep tapping along for another week beginning tomorrow. Jerome Kern's music and the comedy of Victor Moore, Helen Broderick and Eric Blore do their part in making "Swing Time" something which can ill be missed.

"The House of Rothschild"—Belasco (revival).—Recognized as one of the greatest contributions by the talking screen, this recapitulation of the Rothschild saga starring George Arliss returns to the Belasco with a "bargain preview" tonight. Patrons attending the last performance this evening of "Give Us This Night" may remain for the first showing of "The House of Rothschild" at no extra cost. Regular showings commence tomorrow, continuing through next Friday. Supporting Mr. Arliss are Loretta Young, Robert Young, Boris Karloff, Arthur Byron and others.

Gayety—Louise Stewart is featured in the burlesque attraction coming into the Gayety with Sunday's matinee. Other entertainers include Billy (Bumps) Mack, Harry Seymour and, on the distaff side, Margie Bartelle and Jean Wade. Not to forget a rollicking chorus.

Culbertson On Bridge

An Expensive Double.

All penalty doubles may be said to be speculative as long as the setting tricks are not clearly in sight but, nevertheless, these speculative doubles fall into two distinct classes. One class, dear to the heart of average players, and anathema to the expert, is the double based on honor holding alone, regardless of placing in relation to the bidding that went before. The other class is based not nearly as much on a player's actual holding as on his analysis of the opponents' bids, and on the justified opinion that the hand will play badly for the declarer. Thus, an expert is apt to double three no trump on little more than the assurance that the declarer will not be able to run the suits that he and his partner have bid.

	NORTH ♠ A Q J 4 3 ♥ 10 6 ♦ K 10 7 5 ♣ 8 7
WEST ♠ K 10 5 ♥ A Q J 4 ♦ 9 4 ♣ K J 10 3		EAST ♠ 9 8 2 ♥ 8 7 5 3 2 ♦ J 6 ♣ 9 6 2
	SOUTH ♠ 7 6 ♥ K 9 ♦ A Q 8 3 2 ♣ A Q 5 4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 diamond	1 heart	1 spade	Pass
2 clubs	Pass	3 diamds.	Pass
3 no trump	Double	Redouble	Pass
Pass	Pass

One of the remarkable features of this hand was that, despite the eventual result, North did not have a good redouble of three no trump. He already had shown a fair hand by his free bid of one spade and his subsequent "better-than-a-preference bid" of three diamonds over two clubs (one of the danger signals which West failed completely to observe).

West, after much head scratching, finally decided to open the queen of hearts, a poor choice, in my opinion. Declarer won and immediately took a spade finesse. When the jack held he ran off every diamond. On the last three rounds West began to get into trouble. He let go two clubs and one heart. Dummy let go a club on declarer's fifth diamond, and now declarer, with nine tricks in sight, decided that the danger that East had held off with the king of spades on the first round of the suit was negligible, and therefore determined to risk another finesse in order to play for many overtricks. The second finesse succeeding, the entire spade suit was brought in, declarer discarding his remaining heart and two clubs.

With the necessity of reducing to two cards, West found himself in a terrible fix. Dummy's ten of hearts required guarding and, therefore, West could not hold on to his club stopper. He blanked the king and then declarer calmly led a club to his ace and played the queen for the thirteenth successive trick.

West found four redoubled extra tricks, vulnerable, a fitting punishment for his silly double, but poor East had to be satisfied with the sincere but unremunerating sympathy of the kibitzers.

About The Showshops

(With Gerald G. Gross, Batting for Nelson B. Bell)

Could this Stuart Holmes, mentioned thus in a pamphlet sent this desk yesterday by the Treasury Department's section of painting and sculpture, be the same Stuart Holmes who was such a delightfully dastardly villain in silent pictures of two decades ago? Was it possible the sculptor referred to was the mustached varlet whose very presence brought down a storm of hisses back in the days when Elmo Lincoln was playing "Tarzan" and Robert Taylor was graduating into pantywaists?

Checking up on birth dates and other salient data, we found the sculptor and the scoundrel were one. Stuart Holmes, the heavy of Rudolf Valentino's famous "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," is truly on Uncle Sam's pay roll and achieving distinguished success as a wood carver.

Bryant Washburn, Mabel Normand, Pearl White, Louise Glaum, J. Warren Kerrigan, Wallace Reid and other contemporaries of Holmes in the 5-and-10-cent silents have long since passed into death or oblivion, but the wicked rascal who plagued Theda Bara in the 1916 edition of "East Lynne" goes whittling along. Indeed, his sculpturing is so highly appraised by the bosses in Washington that there's even a chance he will be remembered not as a villain to be booed but as a leading American artist.

Now 52 years old, the handsome 6-foot figure of Stuart Holmes, his hazel eyes flashing malice and conniving hands plucking ominously at a waxed mustache, is no stranger to veteran filmgoers. A Shakespearean actor and vaudevillian before he entered pictures in 1905, his outstanding film successes were in "Tess of the d'Urbervilles," "The Four Horsemen," "Prisoner of Zenda" and "The Man Who Laughs."

He retired as an actor about eight years ago and shortly thereafter began devoting his entire time to wood carving. On two or three occasions he returned to the studios to fill parts in obscure productions but he has definitely chosen sculpture, rather than talkies, to wind up his career.

The indefatigable Ray Bell, Loew's horn pusher, turns statistician and remits some interesting facts apropos of the Capitol's ninth birthday anniversary. The luxurious F street house, he finds, has presented 1,962 acts of vaudeville, exclusive of unit shows. It has shown 3,744,000 feet of film, handled 1,642,500 telephone calls through the house switchboard and entertained about 35,000,000 amusement seekers. Among the personalities of stage, screen, radio, opera, concert and sport who have appeared on its large stage are Grace Moore, Eva Le Gallienne, Pat Rooney, Ben Lyons, Bebe Daniels, Kate Smith, Max Baer, the Mills Brothers, George Jessell, Norma Talmadge and so on, far into the night.

The revival idea is booming in Washington. It was announced yesterday the Rialto will open a week from Saturday as a give-the-public-another-chance-to-see-it house. Sponsors are Louise Noonan Miller and A. M. Tolkins, managers of the Little Theater, which also subsists on revivals.

The Little, for its part, reveals that instead of letting "Naughty Marietta" show "The Informer" out on Sunday it will hold over the prize-winning incumbent through next Wednesday and on the following day show "Power" for a week. This Lion Feuchtwanger opus, starring Conrad Veidt, played the Belasco several months ago.

And an announcement yesterday by the Belasco is to the effect balcony prices will be reduced beginning with the "House of Rothschild" engagement, which has a midnight preview tonight. Balcony seats will rent at 25 cents up to 5:30 p. m. and 40 cents after that. Smoking will be permitted in this section of the theater.

Aimee Semple MacPherson again is seeking vaudeville engagements, hopeful that theatergoers will have forgotten her last foray into show business. Then she had been booked into the Capitol by Sam Lyons, her astute agent who connived special details of police to handle the mobs of ticket purchasers he expected. Came opening day, special police—but no patrons. Sam pounced upon the officials, naively demanding the removal of police cordons "because they're scaring away the customers!"

When even the reduction of the bluecoat ranks failed to attract an audience, Lyons prevailed upon Aimee to cancel the flop engagement. "Remember," was his clinching argument, "treat your neighbor like you would yourself" . . . "Where did you get that quotation?" someone asked . . . "Well," Sam admitted triumphantly, "I made it up!"

A £100 bonus had been promised, and although customers packed the aisles for every show, the manager informed that the former record still was unbroken.

In Italy and the other countries he visited Jimmy was pursued by the thought of that record. From Milan, therefore, he wired to Manchester, asking "When was that record made?" . . . "The week," came the answer, "of November 11, 1918."

Some months ago I reported of Dick Merrill's attempt in 1927 to raise money that would enable him to beat Lindbergh across the Atlantic . . . And of Nick the Greek's offer of aid. Nick went to Bradley's, in Miami, and at the dice tables there parlayed a $300 bankroll into $28,000—$2,000 shy of the sum Merrill needed to buy a plane—before the dice got cold and the stake was lost.

Two hours after Merrill landed in Newfoundland yesterday, he dispatched a one-word telegram to Nick, who now is in Hollywood. The one word was "seven."

The grateful Silver proffered the reward—but the youngster spurned it. "I'm a Boy Scout," he insisted, "and I can't accept the rewardd. It's my good deed for today."

The lad then pointed to his young brother. "But he," the Scout suggested, "he's no Boy Scout."

Movie Boners.

Hollywood, Sept. 16.

The popularity of a picture can be gauged by the amount of movie boners sent in by the fans, and the many boners noted in "Swing Time" is just another indicator of the tremendous business it is doing.

KATHARINE HEPBURN.

After Fred Astaire has made good, writes Seymour Richman, his former girl friend, Betty Furness, comes to visit him. Betty meets Fred in his dressings room, and not wishing to speak to her there, Astaire tells her that he will see her in the morning at her hotel. Mr. Richman would like to know how Fred Astaire knew where Betty was staying, because he did appear in her room the next morning.

During the winter sequence, when Fred and Ginger sing "This Is a Fine Romance," Astaire is smoking a pipe and puts the lighted pipe in his overcoat pocket. He doesn't burn his hand, his glove or his pocket. The whole thing puzzles Selma Armstrong.

Concerning the same sequence in this flicker, May von Koaten writes, that while Fred Astaire is sitting in the summer house, which is covered with snow, he puts his hands in his pockets. He hasn't any gloves on now. Yet when he takes his hands out of his pockets he has the gloves on.

All of which proves that the fans are flocking to see "Swing Time," and are actually watching the flicker.

"In the flicker, 'Public Enemy's Wife,'" claims Karl Ireland," there is a rapid-fire sequence in which one gangster car chases another over the roads of Florida. A flash of the speedometer in the pursuing car shows it approaching 70 miles an hour. Then, a flash of the pursued car and its speedometer indicates a speed of 80 miles an hour. And it shows actually the same total mileage as that of the other car—59,348." A very peculiar coincidence, to say the least.

• • • •

There is a scene on a train going from Los Angeles to Topeka via Albuquerque in the flicker, "36 Hours to Kill," and "since I know a little about this line of travel," writes William Carhart, "there is a flicker flaw in the scene which only such travelers would know.

• • • •

"It was after the train had left Albuquerque that Gloria Stuart and a gangster were in the compartment. They were talking when the train went through a tunnel and Gloria Stuart slipped out of the room. Since I've been over that same route on the train, I know that there isn't any tunnel either before or after Albuquerque Station."

All right—but if it is needed for the story—there is a tunnel.

Hobo Gives First Clew In Hunt for Beheader

Cleveland, Sept. 16 (U.P.).—The first clew to identity of a man believed responsible for the beheading of five men and a woman in the last year came to police today from a hobo, who said he had seen the "Mad Butcher of Kingsbury Run."

The informant was quoted as saying he fled the creek where four mutilated bodies were found when the fiend "came after me with a long and murderous-looking knife in his hand."

Discovery's Spurt Fails as Rosemont Wins Stretch Duel

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Narragansett Park, Sept. 16.—Discovery turned wild horse today, ran one of the best races of his career, but lacked a short head of winning, as Rosemont, from William du Pont's Foxcatcher Farms, took the $25,000 added Narragansett special, feature event of the late summer meeting here. A sulking last as the field of eight turned out of the backstretch, Discovery suddenly chose to run. A dozen lengths from the leading Rosemont, Discovery bounded to his field, darted between horses and entered the thick of contention at a time when few in the crowd of 30,000 believed he had a chance to be in the money.

Had Discovery chosen only to run instead of run and fight, some $32,000 would have been added to his life's earnings, but Discovery was in an ugly mood. "Savaging," the horsemen call it. With Time Supply and Rosemont between him and the big money, Discovery wasted valuable time trying to bite both horses. Jockey Sonny Workman, on Time Supply, had to push off the Vanderbilt star at the sixteenth pole. Discovery then went on to the flying Rosemont, but again his head lugged toward his rival.

Jockey Harry Richards, on Rosemont, kept his charge straight, to the finish line but a few strides later, he too had to ward off the charging Discovery.

The judges called for a photograph of the finish but the wait was a formality for the picture showed what almost everyone knew, Rosemont by a head. A length and a half away came Time Supply to take third money by six lengths from a wiltering Accolade, the property of Don Christmas of Upper Marlboro, Md.

Rosemont, a son of The Porter and Garden Rose, both of which wrote racing history in the silks of E. B. McLean, of Washington, was making his second start since he was third in the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap last winter. He was timed in 1:56 2/5 for the mile and three sixteenths, a second and two fifths over the track record for the route set by Discovery in 1934. He paid a $15.20 mutuel.

Rosemont ran a powerful race and was excellently handled by Jockey Richards. Allowed to settle into his best stride after getting away well, Rosemont was asked for real speed, in mid backstretch, where he came through on the rail to wrestle the lead from Rushaway and Sun Teddy, two that wilted out of the picture soon after.

Time Supply went up a moment later but Rosemont had a lead of almost three lengths entering the stretch. With the exception of the now flying Discovery, the battle seemed between Rosemont and Time Supply. Workman, on the latter, went to the whip. Time Supply made a brief challenge, cut down the leader's margin and then began to hang. Rosemont opened a gap again and he seemed headed for an easy victory.

Discovery's effort was truly re-

Giants Split With Pirates; Keep Lead

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 16.—The Giants drew a step nearer the National League flag today, although getting only an even break in a double-header marking their season finale against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Three hits and a walk in the fourth inning accounted for all the Giants' runs as they pulled out a 2-to-1 decision in the opener. Old Waite Hoyt had too much stuff for them in the nightcap and the Pirates won another pitching duel, 4 to 3.

Since the second place Cardinals also split their two starts in Philadelphia today, the even break left the Giants 4½ games in front, with only 11 to play.

Lefty Al Smith had little trouble stopping the Bucs in the first game, although Paul Waner sent them off in front with a homer in the opening inning. The Giants got to Cy Blanton in the fourth, when Travis Jackson and Gus Mancuso singled in succession and Joe Moore's single brought them both in.

In the ninth, Smith got into hot water, with runners on first and third and only one out. But Dick Coffman was rushed in to relieve him and fanned Pinch Hitters Red Lucas and Earle Browne to wind it up.

The second game was an even tighter pitching duel between Hoyt and Hal Schumacher, although the Pirate elbower was wobbly at the start and the Giants got to him for two runs in the first frame on Moore's double, Floyd Young's error and Terry's single. The only other Giant run came in the sixth when Terry lined his second homer of the year into the left field stands.

Deibel Leads in Tourney.

Rye, N. Y., Sept. 16 (AP).—Christopher W. Deibel, defending champion from Youngstown, Ohio, today added a 75 to his first-round score of 80 for a 36-hole total of 155 to take the lead in the United States senior golf championship as the first half of the field completed their play.

Injury to Force Sarron to Rest 2 Months

Pete Sarron, featherweight champion of the world who makes his headquarters in Alexandria, Va., has been ordered to rest for two months because of an arm injury, sustained last May in his bout against Freddie Miller, from whom he won the title at Grimth Stadium.

The enforced vacation will cancel or defer a projected trip to Europe for the 125-pound ruler. Sarron had signed to leave with his heavyweight stablemate—Buck Everett—on the Queen Mary October 7 for England. A series of bouts had been booked in Europe for the two fighters managed by Jimmy Erwin, after which they were to leave for South Africa.

The injury, the exact nature of which has not been disclosed, affects Sarron's left arm. A Washington bone specialist ordered Pete on the sidelines after a thorough examination yesterday.

Since winning the title, Sarron has been one of the ring's most active titleholders, defending his title once—in Dallas, Tex.—and fighting many nontitle bouts. He has won every bout since winning the championship excepting his last engagement, in which he was held to a draw in Richmond by Nick Camaretta, a fighter he previously had beaten in New Orleans.

Gas House Gang Goes Down Fighting as Flag Hopes Dim

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Here's Leo Durocher getting in a few final none-too-pure remarks after being banished in the first game of the Card-Philly double-header in Philadelphia yesterday. Besides Durocher, Manager Frankie Frisch and Ducky Medwick were tossed out during the battle, won by the Phils, 7-3. The other belligerant gentleman is Umpire Stewart.

Phillies Gain Split With Cardinals

St. Louis Makes Triple Play, But Loses, 7-3, Then Wins, 5-2.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 16.—The Cardinals executed a triple play while losing the opener today to the Phillies, 7 to 3, but came back with a belated hitting parade in the nightcap to halve the twin bill, 5 to 2.

The triple killing came in the second inning and nipped a Phils' uprising. Camilli walked and went to second on Arnovich's single. Grace, in attempting to sacrifice, lined to Haines, who doubled Arnovich at first base.

Frequent clashes between players and umpires marked the games, and Frankie Frisch, Durocher and Medwick were banished. The Cardinals' manager was dispatched to the dugout by Umpire Bill Klem for protesting too vigorously when the arbiter called Garibaldi out on a third strike in the third inning of the first game.

Susquehanna Football Team Strikes for Pay

By the Associated Press.

Selinsgrove, Pa., Sept. 16.—Susquehanna University's football "strike" assumed the form of a hopeless deadlock tonight after fourteen regulars refused to report for practice because they said it interfered with their work at the nearby State colony for epileptics.

They figured the time they would lose practicing, playing and traveling with the team would leave them about $2 a week, after they paid for their tuition, books, fraternity fees and other college items.

President G. Morris Smith said some of the players had suggested the college pay them for the time they would lose.

He explained that would be impossible. "First of all, we must live up to the eligibility regulations for Pennsylvania colleges, which specify that no college is permitted to reward its athletes in any way," he said.

Coach A. A. Stagg, jr., said he regretted the incident "because they are all such fine boys, trying to make their way through college." He expressed the hope some way out of the difficulty soon would be reached.

Kenneth Alexander, of Scranton, husky captain of the Crusaders, said: "We are not trying to hold up the college. We want to continue in school and we want to take part in all the activities of campus life."

But President Smith said as far as the university is concerned "this is a closed incident."

The boys are paid $50 a month at the colony. They protested recently that, counting time lost for football, they would receive only between $30 and $40 a month.

4 U. S. Women Win in Open Golf Play

By the Associated Press.

Dixie, Quebec, Sept. 16.—The United States representation in the Canadian women's open golf championship remained intact today as four players from below the border line, headed by Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., joined four Canadians in the quarter-final round.

The defeat of Ada Mackenzie, defending titleholder from Toronto, by Mrs. Thomas D. Rudel, of New York, former Doris Taylor, of Montreal, was the only unexpected casualty as both Miss Miley and Margery Kirkham, of Montreal, the medalist, came through with easy triumphs.

Miss MacKenzie, five times holder of the crown, was eliminated 2 and 1 after piling up a three-hole margin at the turn with a medal score of 39 as compared to Mrs. Rudel's 45. Mrs. Rudel found control of her woods and putter on the home nine, however. She squared the match on the thirteenth and then won the sixteenth and seventeenth, the latter with a birdie five on the 565-yard hole, to take the match.

Navy Varsity Looks Bad Against B Squad in Drill

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 16.—After some kicking and formation work at the Naval Academy this afternoon, the varsity engaged Squad B in defensive scrimmage and was far from successful against the latter's running plays. Against passes the defense was stronger, Frank Case doing some particularly good work.

Gridmen Held Paid as Actors In U.S. Tax Suit

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Sept. 16.—Whether football is a private business or a part of the educational program was argued by attorneys today in a suit of the university system of Georgia to enjoin the Federal Government from collecting taxes on athletic admissions.

Government attorneys who said the case was of Nation-wide importance sought to show Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia were operating a business apart from other activities of the school.

Counsel for the university system contended athletic associations were a part of the State institutions and entitled to exemption from taxation.

"This is an important case because we have 48 States and several large State educational institutions, including the University of Pennsylvania and the University of California, whose teams play before huge crowds," said M. H. Eustace, special assistant attorney general.

Paid Like Actors.

"The Government wants to know whether they will have to be taxed.

"This case undoubtedly will be the first to reach the Supreme Court, and until that time there is no way to determine the constitutionality of the tax."

He asked Federal Judge E. Marvin Underwood to dismiss the injunction suit because the evidence showed football players "are men hired specifically to play football and not to make good marks in history or English; football would not be played if it were not a profitable enterprise."

Marion Smith, attorney for the schools, said it had been proved by the evidence that the athletic associations are a part of the State institutions, thus making them a governmental function, and therefore are exempt from taxation.

The regents seeks to retain $4,810 collected during the 1934 football season. Another suit seeks $20,148 in Federal taxes collected in 1933.

Testimony during the three-day hearing brought out amounts of admissions to games, information as to athletic scholarships and salaries of coaches.

Dr. S. V. Sanford, chancellor of the university system, and Georgia Tech and Georgia officials testified participation in other sports and conduct of a general athletic program would be impossible without football receipts.

Judge Underwood requested counsel to submit briefs and said he would take the case under advisement. Previously he had ruled against the regents, but was reversed by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Electric Eye May Call Third Strike On the Umpires

By the Associated Press.

Johnson City, Tenn., Sept. 16.—Guy T. Luntsford thinks he is about to call the third strike on the hapless baseball umpire—with a little mechanical gadget, a robot ump that couldn't see 'em wrong.

Lantsford's device, on which he has applied for patent, operates with photo electric cells. Unless a pitched ball passed properly over home plate (which would be of transparent material) the light ray would not be broken and the delivery would be recorded as a ball.

But when a strike cut the plate the light ray would sound a gong. The sound of that gong, if the device got in operation on a big scale, would still forever a voice that cries: "Yer out!"

Ohio State Varsity Beats Scrubs in Practice, 27-0

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 16 (AP).—Ohio State University's varsity Buckeyes got their first taste of grid warfare late today, turning back a scrub eleven, 27 to 0, in a scrimmage that went three periods. Joe Williams ran 55 yards for one touchdown. Tippy Dye, diminutive quarterback, threw a pass for the second. Booth and Wasylik each scored a touchdown and Booth kicked three extra points.

Peacock, Yoder Out; Cup Aces Win In Amateur Golf

Last District Survivors Out as Both Bow, One Up, in 3d Round.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Garden City Golf Club, Garden City, Long Island, Sept. 16.—Washington's hopes in the National Amateur championship died today on the tricky greens and cavernous bunkers of Garden City's famous course, as Roger Peacock, of Congressional, and Levi Yoder, of Kenwood, Middle Atlantic title holder, were eliminated in thrilling third round matches by one up counts.

Peacock, conqueror yesterday of Dr. William Tweddell, British Walker Cup captain, lost to 20-year-old Dave Davis, of Tyler, Tex., and Yoder was removed by Jock McLean, 25-year-old Scottish star, who stepped in as Great Britain's outstanding challenger when Hector Thomas bowed out of the picture.

The defeats of Peacock and Yoder this morning were heartbreakers. Both lost on the last hole.

Three Putts on 18th.

Peacock figured to trim Davis, despite the sturdy little Texan's upset conquest of Sandy Somerville, former champion, essayed a comeback, but a 3-putt on the eighteenth green, just when it appeared the Washingtonian would force the match into extra holes, blocked out his chances.

Dormie two down, Peacock won the seventeenth with a brilliant birdie four after Davis knocked three shots into traps, and moved to the eighteenth just one down.

Peacock hit a No. 4 iron 30 feet past the pin, the ball alighting almost on the back edge. Davis, a trifle jittery, dumped his tee shot into a trap back of the green. Davis just got out of the trap and Peacock putted up to within 2 feet.

In brief, Peacock missed his putt, Davis got down in two putts for a half in 4, and the Washingtonian shook hands with the winner.

Peacock never played better golf in his life from tee to green, but it was on the glass-like carpet where he threw away the match.

Peacock Cards a 77.

The first of the three-putt games that proved fatal to Peacock's chances came on the eighth hole. Roger was on nicely 20 feet away, but blew a 3-footer to go one down. This lead the Texan held through the turn.

Davis made a great recovery on the tenth from the rough, rolling in a 15-footer for a 4, to Peacock's 5, and went 2 up.

On the sixteenth Peacock and Davis were on the green in 2, but Davis got down for his 4 and Peacock 3-putted, blowing another 3-footer.

The Kenwood golfer was in a tough spot. With three holes to go he was three down. Few have pulled out in such predicaments here. Yoder stroked out a par four on the sixteenth, despite visits to the rough and bunker, while McLean three-putted.

Then on the seventeenth McLean started cracking. He hooked his second into a bunker, overshot the green with his third, dubbed his fourth and was down for his six. Yoder hit the green in three, and got his par five.

Yoder Shoots an 80.

But Yoder hurried his five iron, brought too much body into the ball, and hooked it way to the right of the green in nasty rough. McLean was short in rough guarding the green, and Levi niblicked 40 feet past the pin, getting a half in four, which wasn't good enough to win this match.

Yoder's putting was a sour as Peacock's. Yoder three-putted the Goodman, Voight, McLean, Fischer Among Field of 16 Left.

A Staff Correspondent.

Garden City Golf Course, Garden City, L. I., Sept. 16.—Four seasoned American Walker Cup stars and two young members of the British team survived the "suicide" or "quick-death" rounds of this thrilling National Amateur Golf Championship today as the field was whittled down to 16, and the tournament brought to a stage where one man's guess is still as good as another's.

Levi Yoder, Kenwood Country Club ace, and Roger Peacock, of the Congressional Country Club, were eliminated, depleting the supply of local golfers in the tournament. Peacock was beaten, 1 up, by Dave Davis, Texas University student. Yoder was eliminated by Jock McLean, of Scotland, by the same score.

In another day of wild upsets, and sensational matches, three of the extra-hole variety, Johnny Goodman, the Omaha Zephyr, odds-on favorite in many quarters, breezed into the fifth round with two impressive victories.

Goodman beat Rodney Coltart, of Philadelphia, 4 and 2, and stopped the golf ticking of the Kansas City night watchman, Walter Blevins, 6 and 4, being two over in the morning, one over par in the afternoon.

Voigt Advances.

Goodman's Walker Cup pals who got by today were tow-headed Johnny Fischer, the Cincinnati law student, who looks extremely dangerous; George Voigt, former Washington, D. C., ace, and Scotty Campbell, of Seattle.

Britishers left in the battle are 18-year-old John Langley, London schoolboy champion, and youngest member ever to make an English Walker Cup team, and the temperamental Scot from Glasgow, Jock McLean.

Langley, who was four down after six holes in his first round match with a Washington, D. C., golfer Monday, crashed through with a spectacular two up victory over the veteran Johnny Lehman, of Chicago, this afternoon, after removing Alex Banazek, of Union, N. Y., 3 and 1.

Although several of the golfers were under par when their matches ended, it was the kid Langley who had the lowest round of the day for 18 holes. Out in 37, even par, he carved out a 74, one over par, with golf that was just too much for the man who once tied for the medal in the National Amateur.

McLean Beats Yoder.

McLean, who beats the turf with his club every time he misses a shot, licked Levi Yoder, Washington golfer, one up after Yoder, dormied three down, won two straight holes and came to grief with a hooked tee shot on the eighteenth.

Then late in the afternoon the jittery Scotchman rolled in a 10-footer for a birdie deuce to eliminate strapping Ernie Pieper, of San Jose, Calif., on the twentieth hole.

Gus Moreland, Texas-born golfer, now working out of good old Peoria, was a survivor today, and nine others are shot makers who have never accomplished anything big in national competition.

One of 'em happens to be 20-year-old Davie Davis, of Tyler, Tex., who yesterday removed Sandy Somerville, and today won from Washington's Roger Peacock, one up, and an Indianapolis golfer, Harold Cork. Davis qualified for the Amateur at Columbia Country Club in Washington.

Ray Billows, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the famous "Cinderella Kid," is among the last 16, as are Tommy Tailor, jr., millionaire from New York, who spends all of his time golfing; Lawr

PWA Swamps Accounts, 18-4, in Post League Playoff Series

Victory Is 2d For Federal Champs

Scoring 16 runs over a three-inning stretch, PWA, Federal "A" League champion, yesterday swamped Accounts and Deposits, 18-4, in their second-round Post Baseball Association championship series. It was PWA's second straight win and the Treasury nine's first defeat.

It was a fairly even ball game for two innings, even though the eventual victors helped themselves to a 1-0 lead in the first, but when PWA finished batting practice in the third the only thing Accounts and Deposits had the memory of an even start and a 9-0 deficit.

Singles by Koenig, Hudson and Farrell, a double by "Lefty" Jewett, and a lusty home run to centerfield, the contribution of Sam Harvey, featured the eight-run uprising. The outburst signalled Lafferty's departure from the mound, Jones going to his rescue. But the relief was only temporary and PWA picked up its bats in the fourth and went back to the business of banging out base hits with gusto.

Two Games Today.

Coes double, preceded by singles by "Lefty" Jewett and Vic Gauzza, gave them three runs, whetting their appetite for another big helping in the fifth that produced five more. Jones and Chilcott singled and Sklar walked, filling the bases, before Miller tripled, unloading the hassocks with the feature bingle of the inning.

Today's games pit Mount Vernon against Procurement on the North Ellipse, and Pepco vs. Naval Air Station on the south diamond. Both games start at 4 o'clock.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COUNT DEAN, $5.80, $3.20, $3.10; GUILDER, $4.40, $3.60; GIFT OF ROSES, $4.30.

COUNT DEAN was not hurried during the first half mile, came through on the inside at the stretch turn and responding gamely to brisk handling, was fortunate in getting through on the inside all through the closing furlong and wore down the leader in the closing strides. GUILDER, well placed all the way, gained command in the stretch and though holding on willingly, was unable to cope with the closing challenge of the winner. GIFT OF ROSES had good speed and though weakening slightly in the drive, lasted to save third from GRANNY'S TRADE. The latter alternated in forcing and setting the pace, weakening in the last three-sixteenths. AMERICAN BELLE was going gamely at the close.

VOTE BOY, under slight restraint early while following in close pursuit of the pace, moved up stoutly nearing the far turn and wearing down ALL FORLORN, held her safe to the end. ALL FORLORN had speed from the outset and fought it out courageously to the close. GREAT HASTE, unable to keep pace early, closed in determined fashion in the last furlong. UPSIDE DOWN, well placed, was unable to get through on the inside when making his effort leaving the backstretch, continued to stay close to the inner rail and was unable to improve his position when called upon in the closing drive.

SHOOTIN' HIGH had speed from the start, fought it out courageously with MR. BLAZE in the run down the backstretch, drew clear before reaching the stretch and held sway to the end. CROW'S FLIGHT, slightly restrained early, moved up stoutly on the outside, closed willingly and was not unduly urged at the finish, when Wooley saw his stable mate in the command. WINNING CHANCE, unable to keep pace early, moved up on the outside, closed willingly getting up in the closing strides to wear down MR. BLAZE for third. MR. BLAZE had his usual keen early speed, though unable to keep up under urging.

ROSEMONT moved up on the inside midway down the backstretch, drew clear before reaching the far turn, increased his lead steadily and hard ridden through the stretch just lasted. DISCOVERY trailed his field until the closing three furlongs, moved up fast when called upon, bore in slightly passing TIME SUPPLY, was straightened out quickly and charging on the leader, just failed to be up in time. TIME SUPPLY, restrained while following in pursuit of the leader, moved up willingly, was bumped slightly after straightening out for the run to the finish and was unable to keep up in the final drive. ACCOLADE was prominently placed throughout, faltering in the last quarter mile.

IDLE ALONG took command at once, was steadied along under slight restraint, withstood determined opposition from FELWYN and hard ridden at the end, increased her advantage in the last few strides. FELWYN, in closest pursuit of the winner throughout, made a game bid to get to the front and placed under severe punishment in the stretch, was not good enough. GRANDPA'S BOY, under restraint for the first half mile, raced up gamely when called upon and closed in determined fashion. Major Harvey Miller Is Appointed Boxing Coach at Maryland

Ring Official Once Fought As a Pro

The University of Maryland's stock on the collegiate clouting market zoomed yesterday with the announcement that Maj. Harvey L. (Heinie) Miller, long a prominent figure in the fight game, had accepted the position of boxing coach for the Terrapin beak bangers.

Miller, who is secretary of the District Boxing Commission and editor of Our Navy, a monthly service publication, succeeds Capt. John W. Harmony and will be assisted by Lyman McAboy, a prominent contender in past Southern Conference championship meets.

Himself at one time a very good professional fighter, Miller has been prominently identified with the boxing business since his retirement from the ring. For a number of years he served as sports editor of a local paper and once was the leading promoter hereabouts in the days when boxing was "bootlegged" to the fistic fans in matches held just outside the District.

30 Years a Referee.

Miller has been a referee for the past 30 years. He has served as an official referee for the Eastern Intercollegiate Boxing Association and the Southern Conference since 1925.

The major participated in 205 bouts during his fighting career. All but 22 of them were professional engagements, and he lost only six. He won the bantamweight championship of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps in a tournament at Newport, R. I., in 1906—two years after he started fighting. Later, as a pro, he annexed the feather and lightweight titles of the Far East.

Miller is a veteran of the World War and saw service in Cuba, the Philippines, China, Nicaragua and Mexico. He is a major in the Fleet Corps Reserves, commanding the Fifth Batallion of that organization.

Hopes for Real Boxers.

Serving to the strains of "My Maryland," the official University of Maryland anthem, will be no novelty to Miller. In 1907, in Gibraltar, Spain, a young, blond featherweight entered the ring on board the battleship Glory to meet Seaman Tatum, champion of the British forces. That young, blond featherweight was Miller, then a first-class seaman in the United States Navy.

Miller wore the black and gold colors of the U. S. S. Maryland and the band from that vessel blared forth with "My Maryland" before the fight started. Young Miller won the bout—his first 20-round encounter.

"I want to get out a larger squad, preach loyalty and training," said Miller yesterday, in discussing his appointment. "I shall actually get in the ring with my boys a couple of hours each day and see if we can't do with a bunch of smart college ringmen something like Jack Blackburn has done with Louis. By that, I mean that we will try to bring back the 1900 style of feinting, counter-punching and on-balance hitting which was the vogue in the days when haphazard punches to non-vital spots were just as rare as tin ears and punch-drunk fisticuffians."

Fleming Ends Hoya's Search For Punter

Jack Hagerty, mogul of moleskins at Georgetown, yesterday forgot the 10 Hoyas lying in sick bay, a distressing thought, long enough to dwell at length on the merits of an end whose rapid improvement and development may solve the coach's long seach for a capable punter good enough in another department of the game to make the first team.

The candidate is Johnny Fleming, a 6 feet, 1-inch individual, who pushes the Fairbanks around to 195, is the best punter on the squad and is getting to be better than a fair to middling end. That's all he was in spring practice, a fair end, and a swell punter, but that was in the spring when a young man's fancy isn't vested in football. You should see him now.

Fleming Is Needed.

Hagert says he has an excellent chance of winning a regular position, even with Dave Noonan, Al Snyder, Johnny Cavadine and Maury Nee still on the roster. If Fleming gets within hailing distance of this quartet as an end, he'll get a regular job, because of his kicking. He gets off those long, picturesque spirals resembling corkscrew ads and does it consistenly, not on Tuesday and Wednesday exclusively.

Fleming also would be a valuable asset to the offense because of his ability to snag passes, particularly short snaps directly over the line of scrimmage. He is fast and agile, too, and would be bad company for any safety man defending a goal line.

The lad prepped at La Salle Military Academy, which sent "Irish" Carroll to Catholic University, and Joe Frank and Bill Valliquette to Georgetown. He played football and ice hockey at La Salle, and was a member of the State scholastic championship hockey team. He also attended Danvers (Mass.) High School and was selected on the All-State eleven.

D. C. Boxers Beat Quantico Marines

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Quantico, Va., Sept. 16.—With Mike Morton and Bob Mathias turning in victories, and Jimmy Ortiz registering a draw, the D. C. National Guard mittmen downed their Marine foemen, in a six-bout smoker here tonight.

In the six-round feature bout, Tony Livingston, Marine middleweight, defeated Sanford Carrier, Washington professional. Livingston appeared in poor shape, fighting barely enough to shade his opponent.

Morton, in perhaps the best shape of his career, pounded out a clean-cut decision over his Marine opponent, Jo-Jo Cook, in the lightweight shindy, while Bob Mathias, invading welterweight, kept on top of Spud Murphy for three rounds, to win unanimously. The Guard redhead dropped his opponent in the third frame, but missed frequently enough to let the leatherneck finish the fight.

Fighting a former New York Golden Glove champion in Tony Sacco, swarthy Jimmy Ortiz started slowly to pick up on his classy adversary in the last two rounds, and hold him to a draw.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

There is, it seems, a bit of undeclared war along the college football front. Amid a total absence of fist-shaking, face-making or acrimony there is in progress, nevertheless, a battle of the publicity office mimeograph machines designed to win the favor of the local press.

POVICH.

Roused to new dreams of empire by its annexation of the Orange Bowl game last season, Catholic University, spurred by yon lean and hungry-looking Chick Kenny, is openly coveting the high place held in Washington football by George Washington U.

Content for these past three years to watch and admire while diminutive John Kingsbury Espey ballyhooed G. W. U.'s football presentations into top favor among Washington fans, C. U.'s Kenny is striking out vigorously in behalf of the Brookland school.

No novice at football ballyhoo is Kenny. A term at the University of Pittsburgh and another at Duquesne familiarized him with the high-pressure stuff of college press agents. He can make a human interest story grow where none grew before, but for three years, against Espey, he has been overmatched.

Hampered by tightly drawn purse strings at C. U., sans a character who deserved mention in the same inhalation with G. W. U.'s Tuffy Leemans, bereft of talent worthy enough to publicize, Kenny had been forced into eclipse.

Espey, with a special promotional fund at his disposal, beat the publicity tom-toms at G. W. U. with fearful fervor. His fireworks displays between halves at a cost of $200 per throw provided an added attraction at G. W. U. games. He arrayed the youth of the city solidly behind G. W. football with his Junior Colonial stunts and, traveling on ample expense accounts, he brought back new ideas from the length and breadth of the land.

When G. W. teams, as last year, were far out of the running for even sectional honors, Espey was able to train all his guns on the publicizing of Leemans into All-America fame. There has been no limit to his ingenuity.

When a particular game needed a bit of needling to prove attractive to prospective patrons, Espey contrived to release a story that Leemans had been offered a bribe to stay out of the contest. And when King Alexander of Yugoslavia was assassinated by a Croat it was the great good luck of Espey to unearth among the G. W. squad a full-fledged Croatian just by way of coincidence.

But Kenny this season has the bit in his teeth. With his C. U. squad having taken on added importance by virtue of its Orange Bowl triumph over Mississippi and its loss of but one game last season, Kenny is now fully alive to the possibilities and following up his advantage.

If Washington football must have a successor to Tuffy Leemans, then Kenny is fully prepared to offer him for approval. With 178-pound Irish Carroll in tow, Kenny is currently engaged in making the rounds of newspaper offices, presenting Carroll personally, letting fall broad hints of his prowess, and inquiring the way to the photo departments.

There is, however, one major difference in the perspectives of Espey and Kenny. The little G. W. minister of propaganda and public enlightenment is happiest when the specially chosen medium of his publicity stunts is well received. George Washington may lose a football game, but if Leemans starred, or his fireworks went over big, or the between-the-halves parade found the drum major at his high-stepping, fancy-strutting best, then Espey is rewarded. He's the showman.

No showman is Kenny. Watching C. U. win a football game, knocking over some big-time opponent, or heading toward an undefeated season is Kenny's chief reward. He thinks not in terms of showmanship but of the scores that go into the record books, of C. U.'s chances of being selected as a post-season opponent in some big game, or of the season's final picture and the glory it might reflect on C. U. football.

Schwagel, best-liked and most personable of all the official tom-tom beaters, would pay for the privilege of being close to Georgetown's team, if it were put up to him that way. He measures his success not by the space he may contrive to snatch on the sporting pages, but on whether Georgetown won or lost. With high-pressure press agentry he simply is not concerned.

Maryland's Hottel likewise is not concerned in the battle for space or prominent notices for his Old Liners. If he can discover a half-pound advantage the foe might have over Maryland in the line, or a greater average experience of one semester per back, then he is rewarded for his research. His idea of good rading is a slide rule.

Six Cup Stars Advance in Amateur

Chester, N. Y.; Russ Martin, of Chicago; Bob Fraser, of Omaha; Bill Holt, Syracuse automobile salesman, who has been sleeping in a trailer with Frankie Strafaci, former public links champion; Melville Heath, Boston, insurance man, and 45-year-old John Ridell, of the host club, veteran of the survivors.

Your former champions—Francis Ouimet, Chick Evans, George Dunlap and Max Marston—were relegated to the sidelines today.

Among the first to tee off this morning, Ouimet, Walker Cup captain, lost to Lloyd, 4 and 3, after dropping the first two holes to birdies and three-putting five greens on the back nine.

Next of the erstwhile Amateur rulers to go out was red-faced, smiling Chick Evans, who put up a noble fight against Johnny Fischer, only to lose, 3 and 2.

Bob Dunlap and Marston won their morning matches, Dunlap being two under in routing John McGuire, of Indanapolis, and Marston upsetting Henry Kowal, of Hamilton, N. Y., on the twentieth hole when his opponent missed a 2-foot putt.

But there was a different story in the nightcap journey around this trying course. Marston lost to Martin, 3 and 2, and Dunlap was the victim of a starting upset at the hands of Mr. Heath, the unknown, 3 and 2.

Fischer, holder of the all-time National Amateur medal record, apparently has been playing the best golf of the tournament. A check up today showed that the lanky Ohioan has been only two over par for 65 holes, which is superb golf for Garden City.

The next champion may be George Voight. Long overdue, playing the greatest golf of his career, Voight walloped Dave Connell, of Colorado Springs, Colo., 7 and 6, being out in 35, 2 under, and shooting 4, 6, 2 for the next three holes. In the afternoon, Voight won from Wilfred Crossley, of Boston, 1 up, being forced to sink a long putt for a birdie on the sixteenth to win, 3 and 2.

Red Sox Absorb 13-3 Beating From Tribe

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 16.—Hal Trosky rifled his forty-first home run of the season as the Cleveland Indians bunched 14 hits to crush the Boston Red Sox today by a 13-to-3 score.

The Tribe first baseman got his homer in the first inning and hit safely on three other trips to the plate. This brought his consecutive hits to nine—two short of Tris Speaker's major league record. Trosky batted in five of the Tribe's tallies.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A Staff Correspondent.

Camp Letts, Md., Sept. 16.—Although its opening game of the season is less than ten days away, the complexion of George Washington University's football team is as vague and mystifying as when the squad assembled here almost two weeks ago for practice. Moreover, there is little chance of Coach Jim Pixlee's making up his mind about a starting eleven much before the initial kick-off, for he is as perplexed as the next one at the moment.

Puffing complacently on a cigar stub, inquisitively eyeing each batch of men for some new sign of talent, Pixlee, with a resigned nod of his head, admitted it would be a tough job selecting a first team. The Colonials aren't overburdened with material, mind you, but for the first time in the last three years there is a semblance of equalness and balance between what will be the first and second teams. The boys are almost too evenly matched, at this writing, for their coach's peace of mind.

Different This Year.

About this time last year, for example, anybody in George Washington's camp, from Pixlee down to the waterboy, could tell you that Harry Deming and Dale Prather were destined to be the regular tackles, barring broken legs, etc., etc.; that "Tuffy" Leemans would be the No. 1 halfback; that Red Rathjen, Sid Kolker and a couple of others of their ilk also were slated for first-team positions. They were so far ahead of the rest there wasn't room for competition, and a dearth of competition, as any coach will tell you, makes for lazy football players and teams.

But this year, ah, this year things are much different, for the first time a boy loafs on the job, gets indolent and lazy there is another to step into his place and usually do just as well. If competition is the spice of life it is safe to say this football camp is one of the liveliest extant.

Dale Prather, Stan Grbovage, Harold Schiering and Johnny Rebholz are the outstanding tackle candidates, to name one position where the fighting is heaviest. Frank Kavalier and "Salty" Salturelli are trying to beat off a pack of would-be centers, and in the backfield Izzy waging a private civil war for one Weinberg and "Nig" Tihila are of the halfback posts. Frank Merka and Elmer Hogg are clinching over the fullback berth; Jay Kenslow and . . . oh, it could go on like this for seven more paragraphs, all the way through the roster. You get the idea, don't you?

Lampy, Former Boston Player, Is Dead at 64

Boston, Sept. 16 (U.P.).—Patrolman Henry Lampy, 64, formerly a player with the old Boston club of the National League baseball circuit, died today.

In 1894, Lampy, then 22 years old, pitched for the old Boston team. Until 1900 he played with other professional clubs. In 1900 he joined the Boston police force and was assigned to the South Boston police station, where he served until his death.

Mary Gray and Doris McCarty, of Twin Oaks, will play Charlotte Mataja and Helen Ascosi, of Burroughs, at 3:30 p. m. today for the girls' tennis doubles championship of the playgrounds at Chevy Chase. These two teams advanced to the finals yesterday with straight-set victories in their semifinal matches.

Mary Gray and Doris McCarty defeated Helen Miller and Valerie Loomis, of Chevy Chase, 7—5, 6—4, while Charlotte Mataja and her Burroughs partner, Helen Ascosi, moved up by beating Ida Burns and Judith Lognando, of Potomac avenue, 7—5, 7—5.

Cox Is Mat Foe Of Managoff Tonight

Meet at Turner's Arena; Four Preliminary Bouts on Card.

Joe Cox and Ivan Managoff, a duo of the more popular burp producers, will emit their hiccoughs 'neath a roof as the regular weekly meeting of the Joe Turner Throwing Circle is moved indoors to the Turner Arena, Fourteenth and W streets, tonight.

Cox and Managoff are scheduled to wrestle to a one-fall, two-hour time limit finish. They were scheduled to work against each other last week, but an injury to Managoff prevented his appearance here.

The customers will view the grunting and groaning from an improved site. The arena has not only been completely renovated during the past summer, but many changes have been made in its set-up.

Two sections of elevated seats have been removed to make room for 1,000 ringside chairs. A ventilating system believed capable of clearing the air of all smoke generated by excited spectators has been installed at a cost of $1,500.

In a 45-minute semifinal, Hans Kampfer, the moth exterminator, will be paired with Little Beaver, who is known as Little Beaver because he is neither little nor a beaver.

Interesting preliminaries scheduled for 30 minutes will bolster the main attraction. Nick Campofreda, former Western Maryland athletic star of whom much is expected, will engage Jim Wallis in one of the prelims. Campofreda was a tackle on one of the better Western Maryland football teams and was undefeated as a boxer on the Green Terror squad.

Further Gains In Store Sales Held Probable

Increase of 1935 Expected to Average 10 Per Cent at Least.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 16.—Notwithstanding the great recovery in sales and earnings of department stores from depression lows, the outlook for further improvement is highly encouraging, and indications are that the full year 1936 will show a 10 per cent sales increase, as against 1935, with an even greater improvement in earnings, according to the "F. & B. Industries Service," an analysis of 28 industries published by Fenner & Beane. Rising employe income and increased dividend distributions are the two factors most stimulating to department store dollar sales, the survey states.

"A 10 per cent increase in sales may carry 1936 department store profits to within 15 per cent of the income levels of 1929," in the opinion of the report. "Much improved operating conditions in the department store trade suggest that as much as 20 per cent of sales increases may be carried down to net income.

Bonus payment to veterans have unquestionably caused much of the estimated 11 per cent increase in sales volume of department stores already apparent in the first eight months of 1936, according to the survey which believes that $50,000,000 of bonus funds may have crossed department store counters in the first seven months of this year.

"In the first half of 1936, factory pay roll totals, according to the Department of Labor, were 11.8 per cent greater than in the corresponding 1935 interval. The increase in recent months has been even larger and with a high level of activity anticipated in heavy industry over the balance of the year, a total gain in employe compensation of 10 per cent to 12 per cent for 1936, as compared with 1935, appears inevitable.

Aircraft Sales Abroad Exceed 1935 Business

Exports Thus Far 32 Per Cent More Than for Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

American aircraft manufacturers are doing more business abroad this year than last, with sales in China, Germany, Italy and Australia contributing to the upturn.

This was disclosed yesterday by Commerce Department figures. They showed aircraft exports for the first seven months of this year were 32 per cent greater than for the similar 1935 period, the totals being $11,639,450 and $8,818,096, respectively.

A total of 294 planes, valued at $6,416,369, was exported in the seven months this year, compared with 199, valued at $4,740,145 in the 1935 period. This was an increase of 47 per cent in number. Exports of airplane engines increased from 295, valued at $1,076,752, in 1935, to 409, valued at $1,902,768, this year.

China was the heaviest buyer in both the 1935 and 1936 periods, accounting for more than a third of the exports this year. Russia's buying dropped off from $490,060 in the 1935 seven months to only $45,482 this year. Japanese purchases also decreased from $656,006 to $436,653.

Among individual countries, however, increases far outnumbered the declines. German buying rose from $161,063 in the 1935 period to $267,147. French purchases were up from $131,586 to $149,189, Italy's from $91,459 to $177,483, and Australia's from $26,700 to $468,653.

General Motors Sales Abroad Show Big Gain

New York, Sept. 16 (AP).—Sales of General Motors cars and trucks to dealers in the overseas market during August totaled 24,966 units, the largest August volume in any year since 1928 and 16.4 per cent over August of last year.

In the first eight months of 1936, sales totaled 223,927 units, an increase of 15.9 per cent over sales of 193,153 for the first eight months of 1935.

25 Chicago Stocks Show Gain for Week

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Twenty-five representative stocks listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange had a market value at the close of business for the week ended September 12 of $981,974,125, an increase of $1,279,750, or 0.13 per cent, as compared with the market value of $980,694,375 at the close of the previous week, according to a compilation by Paul H. Davis & Co., members of the Chicago Stock Exchange.

At the close of the corresponding week a year ago, the same 25 stocks had a market value of $686,746,000, indicating an increase during the year of $295,228,125, or 42.99 per cent.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Drift Lower in Moderate Volume; Wheat Higher, Treasurys Off.

New York, Sept. 16.—Stocks pursued their irregular downward course again today in moderate activity. Fractional losses prevailed among the leaders at the opening, and although aviations and coppers lifted, there was no general reversal of trend. Many traders lightened their commitments in anticipation of the Jewish holiday tomorrow. Volume picked up during the middle of the day and the total was over 1,000,000 shares.

Bonds also were irregular in indifferent trading. Treasurys sagged slightly. Wheat closed higher, December being up 1⅝ cents a bushel. Foreign exchange business was routine; sterling sagged fractionally and francs were pegged at the gold point.

Steel opened at 71⅝, off ⅝, and gave up nearly another point before meeting support. American Can, American Telephone, Standard of New Jersey were fairly steady, but substantial fractions were lost by Consolidated Edison, General Electric, Western Union, Corn Products and General Motors.

Wright Aero continued its acrobatics and Curtiss-Wright appeared in volume at higher prices for both issues. Douglas also advanced and United Aircraft firmed after a half-point gain at the start.

Midweek business news was favorable. Steel ingot production was reported running 72 per cent of capacity, thanks to demand for sheets and other lighter products offsetting slackness in the building industry. Increased automobile travel over Labor Day slashed stocks of gasoline, including gasoline in process, by 475,000 barrels, while the daily average runs of crude to stills were setting a new record of 3,941,000 barrels and crude production increased 12,300 barrels daily. Electric power production dipped slightly, due to the holiday, although New England, Southern and Rocky Mountain sections marched ahead and all regions were 11 per cent higher than a year ago.

Excess Reserves.

Yesterday the money market lost heavily to the central bank on account of cash subscriptions to the new Treasury issue which were paid in then, and today it lost heavily again through income tax collections. On both accounts it was calculated that the loss to excess reserves for the country at large was something around $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 for the week ended today. It gained about $140,000,000, mostly early in the month, through the payment of interest on the public debt. It looks as though excess reserves, which for the country as a whole reached $2,000,000,000 September 9, had seen their peak for some time, since income tax checks which are deposited later this week will cut down the total still more. It is calculated that excess reserves here, which recently stood around $600,000,000, have been pulled down about $150,000,000 or so since yesterday.

Turnover.

Income tax collections for the month probably will be $285,000,000, something less than $100,000,000 probably being paid today. Deducting the $140,000,000 interest on the public debt and adding $369,000,000 cash payments on the new Government issue, it is evident that the market this month is losing $514,000,000 to the central bank, exclusive of offsets through Treasury net expenditure, which is running around $200,000,000 for the month. The Treasury maturity yesterday turned out to be almost a 100 per cent exchange of new securities for the old, only $2,000,000 of the $514,000,000 maturity being unexchanged.

Self-Regulation.

It is not so easy to agree with Mr. Haskell's inference that the new agreement regulating the use of capital surplus to relieve income or earned surplus account of their proper charges is an effective safeguard. Companies must notify the stock exchange and obtain approval of stockholders before indulging in such antics. Approval of stockholders seems to be a useless and expensive gesture. There is unlikely to be any dissenting voice among stockholders on a plan that inflates reported earnings and therefore enhances the possibility of higher market price. It is proper that buyers be given advance notice through the exchange, which would continue to use moral pressure for sound practice, but as Mr. Haskell says, "we must rely upon the accounting profession to see that the fundamental principle involved is faithfully and intelligently applied to the perplexing individual cases." Why not simply require an accountant's certificate that the charges against capital surplus are in accordance with sound accounting practice?

Safety.

No one will challenge the statement of the insurance company executives who conferred with the President that "American citizens who hold life insurance policies issued by insurance companies in the United States possess the safest of all possible securities." Their safety rests on Government bonds and high grade corporate and private mortgages. The only qualification that might be added is that no securities are proof against a decline in buying power of the owner in a period of severe inflation. One of the oddities during the German inflation was that there was no unit of money in circulation small enough to pay small premiums on insurance policies. French insurance companies maintained their solvency during inflation by the sale of real estate to supplement fixed income from premiums and interest while operating costs were soaring.

Wheat Soars In U. S. Trading And Liverpool

European Breadstuff Demand Responsible for Wave of Buying.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 16.—Soaring anew everywhere today, wheat prices both at Liverpool and Winnipeg outdid Chicago, responsive to activity of European breadstuff demand.

The Liverpool wheat market rose to the highest level reached since 1930, and Winnipeg quotations shot upward at one time more than 3 cents a bushel. Export purchases of Canadian wheat were estimated as in excess of 1,500,000 bushels, on top of about 2,250,000 bushels taken yesterday and in addition to fair sales of United States Pacific Coast wheat to England and Ireland.

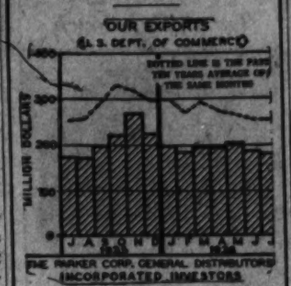
July Imports Exceed Exports 15 Millions



Boston, Mass., Sept. 16.—July export trade dropped 4 per cent from June, while imports increased 2 per cent, resulting in a $15,000,000 excess of imports over exports. This is not an alarming condition as our imports were largely of crude rubber, tin and wood pulp, which do not compete with our own production. Exports consisted largely of electrical apparatus, aircraft, machinery, iron and steel manufactures, automobiles and semi-manufactured articles.

Fall Financing Data Announced

By the Associated Press.

Announcing the final result of the Treasury's fall financing, Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday a total of $981,826,050 of the 20-23 year 2¾ per cent bonds had been allotted.

He reported that $469,965,250 of the bonds had been allotted in cash subscriptions. The original cash offering was $400,000,000, but Morgenthau exercised his authority to increase this.

A total of $511,860,800 of the new bonds was allocated for exchange for 1.5 per cent notes which matured today. The note maturity totaled $514,000,000, and exchanges thus fell below the total maturity by only about $2,200,000.

Figures Show 1936 Inflation Is Under 1929

Duration Period, However, Rates Next to Civil War Era.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 16.—The estimated amount of inflation in 1936 has been exceeded by a wide margin in the past, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. In 1929, the last year prior to the recent deflationary movement, the percentage of inflation was 170.2 as compared with 94.8 in 1936. In 1919, when inflation was the greatest for the period under consideration, the percentage was 335.8. At the same time, inflation has been greater in 1936 than in any previous year if the war years and the immediate post-war years are excepted.

Stronger arguments against further inflation are found in the duration and the extent of the present movement. This year will represent the fourth consecutive year of expanding inflation. Of the 15 previous inflationary movements since the end of the Civil War, only two lasted a longer time than that already covered by the current one. The duration of the inflationary movement which began in 1896 was six years while the inflationary movement during the World War lasted five years.

The current inflationary movement has not resulted entirely from Government spending. Extension of private credit especially to purchasers of automobiles, electrical equipment and similar products, has been an important factor in the inflationary movement. A curtailment in the demand for such products might easily offset the effect of Government spending. The Government went heavily into debt prior to 1933, but it was not able to stem the deflationary movement.

A deflationary movement in 1937 would consequently not be surprising. At the same time, a major collapse does not appear probable. The extent of the current movement offers an even more impressive argument against its extension. Since 1932, inflation has shown an increase of 79.6 per cent. Only once since the end of the Civil War has there been a greater increase. This was during the World War when inflation increased 124.6 per cent. With the exception of this instance, no increase in the past has amounted to more than 45.6 per cent.

Diplomats Decline Return to Madrid

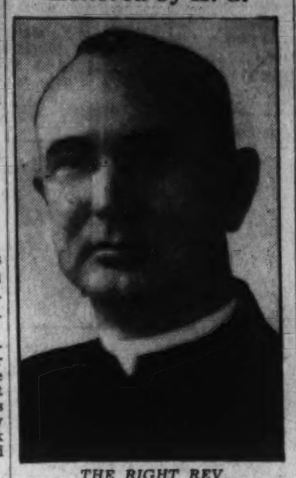
Saint Jean de Luz, France, Sept. 16 (AP).—Foreign diplomats accredited to Madrid virtually decided tonight to refuse the Spanish government's demand that they return to the capital.

American, French and British diplomats were among them.

"We reasoned that the Madrid government can do nothing with our refusal except break relations with our countries," one high diplomat said.

"That is impossible, of course, for we then would have nothing to do except recognize the Burgos government (the junta set up by the Fascists at Burgos, Spain). Madrid knows that perfectly well."

Honored by K. C.



THE RIGHT REV. ARTHUR A. O'LEARY, president of Georgetown University, who yesterday was selected as Faithful Friar of the Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus. Selection was announced by Francis J. Rafftery, Faithful Navigator of the Fourth Degree. Father O'Leary, with other recently elected officers of the Fourth Degree, will be installed at a meeting at the Mayflower Hotel Monday night.

Eastern Heiress, Ranch Owner, Wed To Barber in West

By the Associated Press.

Flagstaff, Ariz., Sept. 16.—Another Eastern heiress who found romance in the West was on a wedding trip today with her barber husband en route East to visit her parents.

She is the former Laurette Patterson Robeson, 22, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Robeson, Newport, R. I., principal heir to the $3,000,000 estate of her grandmother, Mrs. Elisha Dyer.

Miss Robeson married Lawrence Tidrick, employe of the Longley Barber Shop, at a small cafe here Friday night. Friends disclosed the couple left by automobile Sunday to visit the Texas centennial and planned to continue eastward to Newport.

The brown-haired, vivacious bride, who often was seen in Flagstaff in overalls and cowboy hat, came West and bought the Lazy PK Ranch, 7 miles north of here, after being prominently mentioned in the will of Mrs. Dyer, the former Mrs. Sidney Turner Swan, of Baltimore.

Tidrick, handsome, dark-haired and moustached barber, 30 years old, had worked here since April. Friends said he met Miss Robeson about six weeks ago. He obtained a divorce from his first wife the day he married Miss Robeson.

Warship Ready, Strike Delays Its Launching

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 16.—Launching of the United States Navy destroyer Fanning was postponed today because of a strike called by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America at the Staten Island plant of the United Shipyards, Inc.

A spokesman for the company said it was hoped the labor troubles would be settled in time to permit the launching of the destroyer, one of four being constructed at the Staten Island plant, tomorrow, a day behind schedule.

Irving Covert, president of Local 12, of the Industrial Union, said the strike was called because the union felt the company had not complied with the terms of an agreement signed in June to grant a 5 per cent wage increase to employes in all departments.

A spokesman for the company said arrangements had been made to meet a strikers' committee this afternoon and expressed confidence a settlement would be reached.

Covert said the strike had halted work at the yards where, he said, about 2,000 men, working in three eight-hour shifts, had been working on the construction of the Cummings and Dunlap, two of the four $4,000,000 destroyers ordered by the Federal Government. The Mahan, recently turned over to the Navy, and the Fanning are the others.

Road Builders Hear Cyclists' Tale of Trip From Argentina

Friend Describes 14,000-Mile Journey of Two Youths at Luncheon of National Association; Return to Buenos Aires by Ship Planned.

Buenos Aires to Washington on a bicycle built for two!

That is the story told by two Argentine medical students—Victor Scarffia and Vincente Gregori Espasa—who had pedaled out of the capital city on New Year's Day, 1934, headed for the north.

Two hundred and fifty miles out of Buenos Aires brought the young adventurers to Mercedes; the end of the open highway and at the foot of the mighty Andes. By mulepack, on foot, ever climbing steep trails, they finally left perpetual snow and giddy precipices behind to pedal down the white road to Santiago, Chile.

Resting awhile in the capital city, the Argentine youths set out across the Great Nitrate Desert where roads are unknown and violent sand storms cloud the view.

Lost in Blizzards.

Memory of that struggle through the desert is still a nightmare to the boys. Lost in blinding blizzards and suffering from thirst, they finally stumbled on a friendly wilderness habitation. Adventure still beckoned.

The capital city of Peru—Lima—was the next stop. Then once more the open road lay before them and a comparatively easy journey through Ecuador to Colombia. Here, however, they parted company with the broad highway and, pointing their light bicycle northeastward, they entered the fever jungles of Darien.

That both boys should succumb to fever was only inevitable. That they should finally reach Panama alive was little less than a miracle. Actually they spent 30 days crashing through the jungle on a journey that, by sea, can be completed overnight.

Yet the toughest part of their itinerary lay ahead. Planning to visit the ancient ruins in northern Honduras they shipped their bicycle to Merida, Yucatan. Then heading north they crossed the Colon Mountains by foot and mule and plunged into the chicle territory of the Olancho Province.

Sick Again.

An airplane finally came to their rescue. It was one of many used to transport the gum plant north to British Honduras. After much-needed rest and hospital care the journey was resumed.

But the worst was now over. Dim trail gave way to rough road and rough road to broader highway. After what seemed an eternity the boys sighted the snow-capped volcanic Popocatepetl and with light hearts traversed the modern route that winds into Mexico City. From then on the Pan American highway led them by easy stages to the Rio Grande and Texas. Some time was spent cycling through the Western States, but with New York as their objective before autumn the adventurers headed East.

Tanned a deep brown from their 14,000-mile tour—a distance more than half the circumference of the globe—the youthful Argentines have only one thought in mind—home and reunion. But it will not be by bicycle. The homeward journey will be made by ship or plane.

Monroe Street Bus Re-Routing Denied

The Public Utilities Commission, for the third time, yesterday rejected an application of residents of Monroe street northeast to reroute the Rhode Island avenue bus line between Twelfth and Twenty-second streets.

Acting upon a petition for a rehearing, the commission pointed out that the new request came too late after the last decision as the law requires that a demand for a new hearing must come within 30 days after the order is issued.

The commission held two hearings on the request, one last spring and one in mid-July, and then rejected the petitions on the ground that the change was not merited and that residents of neighboring streets objected to having the line moved in front of their property.

Meeting Is Postponed.

The regular meeting of the Potomac Rose Society, which was to have been held today, has been postponed until September 24, it was announced last night.

Roberts Will Undergo Appendectomy Today

William A. Roberts, people's counsel, yesterday entered Georgetown Hospital, where today he will be operated on for appendicitis. He had returned this week from a trip to the American Bar Association convention in Boston.

Roberts' illness comes on the heels of the return to work of Riley Elgen, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, who had been ill since early summer.
